Abstract: In 1974 Janet Gray Hayes became mayor of San Jose, California and the first female elected to the office of mayor of a large American city. She was overwhelmingly reelected to a second term, and served as mayor until 1982. Prior to her groundbreaking election in 1974, she won a seat on the San Jose City Council and also served as vice mayor. This collection documents her political trajectory from 1974-1982. During her tenure as mayor she focused on urban development issues and smart growth planning, and was very responsive to increased citizen access to the mayor's office. Hayes became an important role model for women in politics, her success in government represented a watershed for politically minded women in the region, and the Santa Clara Valley became know as the "Feminist Capital of the World." This collection consists of administrative files, election materials, personal files, and public relations materials, most of which were amassed while Hayes served as city council member, vice mayor, and mayor of San Jose.

Biographical History

Janet Gray (Frazee) Hayes was born in 1926 in Rushville, Indiana, the second of two daughters born to John P. Frazee, Jr. and Lucile Charman Gray Frazee. Raised in an active Republican family, Hayes was introduced to politics at a young age. In 1940 the Frazee family home became an official campaign base for Wendell Wilkie, the Republican presidential nominee. Wilkie carried his home state of Indiana, but was overwhelmingly defeated by the Democratic candidate, President Franklin D. Roosevelt. The Wilkie experience introduced Hayes to the political campaign process.

Hayes was named valedictorian of her high school class and went on to attend the University of Indiana. While in college she became a member of the Kappa Alpha Theta social sorority serving as the organization's vice president and then president. She was also very active in the local YWCA. Hayes was selected for Phi Beta Kappa in her junior year, and Mortar Board her senior year. In 1948 she graduated magna cum laude with an A.B. in Liberal Arts. After graduation, she received a scholarship to attend the University of Chicago, where she graduated with a master's degree in Social Service Administration, again magna cum laude. While attending graduate school she met Kenneth Hayes, a medical student, and in 1950 they were married.

While Kenneth completed his medical degree Hayes took a position as a psychiatric social worker in Chicago, where she witnessed firsthand the devastating effects of poverty in the communities she served. This experience shaped her political views and would later inspire her to run for public office. Hayes left social work to start a family, and in 1952 gave birth to first daughter, Lindy. Shortly thereafter the family moved to Denver, where Kenneth completed his residency. It was in Denver that their first and only son, John, was born. Following the conclusion of his residency, the Hayes family moved to San Jose, California, where Dr. Hayes accepted a position at the Agnew State Hospital. Daughters Katherine and Megan were both born in San Jose.

Upon arrival in California, Hayes quickly developed community roots and an interest in politics. She registered to vote as an Independent, but quickly realized that she was not eligible to vote in the primary elections and officially registered as a Democrat. She became active in the PTA and later with the League of Women Voters (LWV), serving as president of the organization for a time. The LWV provided her with important base for her future political career. Her first introduction to city politics was as a concerned mother; while pregnant with her daughter Megan she beseeched the San Jose City Council to consider placing a traffic signal or a crossing guard at a busy intersection that her children crossed every day on their way to school. The council promised that they would act before the beginning of the next school year, although a light was not installed until after Hayes was elected mayor of San Jose in 1974.

By the 1960s Hayes became an important member of the San Jose Redevelopment Agency and later served as its first female chair. She was also the first woman appointed to the local YMCA board of directors. Her experiences in predominantly male agencies led her to run for a seat on the city council in attempt to provide a voice for other women in San Jose. Her civic involvement paid off and she was elected to a four-year term on the San Jose City Council. Hayes served as a council member from 1971 until 1973, and from 1973 to 1974 she served as vice mayor under Mayor Norman Mineta.

By 1973 Hayes had grown from a socially active housewife to vice mayor of one of the largest cities in the nation. In 1974 Hayes decided to run for mayor of San Jose. She ran a grassroots campaign with the help of over 1,000 volunteers who canvassed the city on her behalf. Hayes ran on a platform of controlled growth, urging voters to "make San Jose better before we make it bigger." As part of her campaign, and in effort to make herself more accessible to voters, she created a telephone hotline connected to her election headquarters so that voters could directly voice topics of concern. Hayes won the race, earning 1,667 votes more than her opponent, former chief of detectives, Bart Collins. With this victory, Hayes became the first woman to be elected mayor of a large American city.

At a time when sexism and gender discrimination permeated state and national politics, Hayes' watershed victory generated local and national press. Many wondered how to address the woman mayor, though she consistently informed the press and others that "Madame Mayor" would suffice. In terms of policy, she championed controlled urban growth, restored historic buildings, and helped transform San Jose into a model city. By 1977 New West magazine had voted San Jose the second most livable city in the west. Impressed with her accomplishments, then California governor Jerry Brown appointed Hayes chairperson of his Urban Development Advisory Committee in anticipation that she might do the same for the state. Hayes also kept her promises regarding citizen access to the mayor's office. She held semi-monthly open houses at city hall, and continued her successful hotline concept once elected, this time dubbing the service "Dial-a-Mayor."

1978 would prove to be one of the most challenging years that Hayes would face in office. For the first time since joining the San Jose City Council in 1971, she voted to support a Gay Pride week, though she later reversed her vote after pressure from local religious groups. At this time Hayes also came out against Proposition 13, a property tax reduction initiative overwhelmingly passed by California voters. In the same year she sought reelection; her campaign against City Council member Al Garza was fierce and at times bitter. After facing a runoff election, Hayes triumphed, winning over 70 percent of the vote.

Hayes received tremendous publicity as the first female mayor of San Jose, and nationally as Santa Clara County edged into the national political landscape as the "Feminist Capital of the World." Hayes' favorable publicity, combined with the success of other female candidates across the U.S. led a number of national magazines to run stories on the role of women, feminism, and politics. Time, People, U.S. News and World Report, and even some international papers carried stories highlighting the success of these female candidates. Hayes was featured in a number of articles, alongside Diane Feinstein of San Francisco, Jane Byrne of Chicago, Isabella Cannon of Raleigh, North Carolina, Carole McClellan of Austin, Texas, and Margaret T. Hance of Phoenix, Arizona. In 1979 U.S. News and World Report ran a story highlighting the recent victories of women in politics across the nation. According to the report, 750 cities out of 18,800 municipalities had female mayors-clearly women were making inroads into politics at all levels. From 1975 to 1979 the number of women in public office increased from 4.7 percent to 10.9 percent, with the largest increase at the local and state levels. Hayes' greatest legacy remains her support of women in local government, and her commitment to gender equality.

Hayes' competency and leadership enabled her to be elected to the eleven-member Executive Board of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, a post that elevated San Jose's national esteem, and enhanced Hayes' access to the Carter administration. She received numerous honors and awards for her contribution to politics. In 1975 she received the "Woman of Achievement Award" from the San Jose Mercury News and in 1976 she received the San Jose "Anti-Defamation League Award." Hayes was named to the delegation supporting Governor Jerry Brown at the Democratic National Convention in New York City, and was the only woman on a list of mayors submitted as possible vice presidential candidates. In 1977 a Decision Research Institute survey of Santa Clara County voters ranked Hayes as the most admired politician in the region. At the local level, Hayes helped bring comparable worth issues to the fore. When local women held a strike in 1981 after a survey revealed gender pay discrimination in San Jose, Hayes flew to New York with a union negotiator to appear on The Today Show. Her appearance elevated the issue of comparable worth to the national level.

By the time she left office in 1983, Hayes had blazed a trail for women in politics throughout the Santa Clara Valley and indeed the nation. Though she never went on to run for another public post, Hayes continued to serve the public. After her tenure as mayor, Hayes was active with the San Jose Art Museum, and served on many boards and councils, including the Association of Bay Area Governments, and the Santa Clara County Intergovernmental Council. She also served as a community and customer relations director for a consulting firm that served the high-tech industry in the Silicon Valley.

Scope and Content

The Janet Gray Hayes Papers document the historical significance of Hayes' mayoralty in state and national politics and her influence in bringing other women into local government. Hayes was pivotal in popularizing the Santa Clara Valley's reputation as the "Feminist Capital of the World." Items in this collection also detail Hayes' commitment to improving citizen access to the mayor's office, reducing crime, and promoting controlled urban growth in San Jose. The Janet Gray Hayes Papers are organized into four series: Administrative Files, Campaign & Election Materials, Personal Materials, and Public Relations Materials.

Arrangement

The Janet Gray Hayes Papers are organized into four series: Series I: Administrative Files; Series II: Campaign & Election Materials; Series III: Personal Materials; Series IV: Public Relations Materials.

Series Scope and Content Summary

This series documents the political trajectory of Janet Gray Hayes beginning with her 1971 election to the San Jose City Council and 1973 election to the post of vice mayor of San Jose, followed by her victorious 1974 and 1978 mayoral campaigns. This series provides a record of her tough 1978 mayoral reelection campaign against opponent Al Garza. The race was competitive, exhausting, and at times downright vicious; Garza spent most of the campaign attempting to discredit Hayes and her achievements during her first term as mayor. In the end, Hayes' solidly defeated Garza, winning over 70 percent of the vote.

Researchers interested in the history of San Jose voter trends will find this series useful. Included is "A Survey of Voter Attitudes in the City of San Jose," compiled in 1974 by the Diridon Research Corporation for the Janet Gray Hayes for Mayor campaign. This comprehensive publication outlines voter demographics in San Jose, as well as opinions on countless issues such as growth, the environment, law enforcement, business, and gender. This series includes correspondence, endorsements, printed campaign literature, and clippings.

Series Scope and Content Summary

This series documents Hayes' personal and political life for over half a century. This series details the many civic activities that Hayes undertook preceding her role as a public servant, as well as aspects of her personal life. Included in this series are letters from relatives and friends, photographs of the Hayes family, and biographical materials about Hayes.

Avid supporters of the arts, the Janet Gray and Kenneth Hayes proudly endorsed the works of Alexander Calder (uncle to Kenneth Hayes). Calder was a world-renowned sculptor and artist, most famous for his mobiles. Throughout her public life Hayes was rarely photographed without wearing one of Calder's fanciful lapel pins. The correspondence file in this series contains a congratulatory letter Calder wrote Hayes following her election victory.

Correspondence in this series also underscores Hayes' skill at balancing the task of governing one of the largest U.S. cities while simultaneously remaining a committed mother to her four children. Letters from Hayes' children, all teens and young adults by the time she was mayor, highlight the active role she played in their lives, while simultaneously carrying out her duties as an elected official.

This series also contains documents concerning the tragic 1973 murder of Hayes' mother, who was shot and killed in an attempted robbery in her home in Indiana. Despite this horrible tragedy, Hayes maintained her political commitments and resolved to stamp out crime in San Jose.

Series Scope and Content Summary

This series consists of public relations materials including press releases, speeches, newspaper clippings, photographs, memorabilia, and awards. The bulk of this collection consists of publicity photographs of Hayes, taken at various events during her tenure in office.

Researchers interested in women's political history will find this series of note as there are several items documenting the historical significance of Hayes' mayoralty. One such item is a news article about Hayes from a Swiss newspaper, demonstrating the international interest in her election. Photographs in this series also document the rapport Hayes had with President Jimmy Carter and First Lady Rosalynn Carter; there are several photographs of Hayes with the Carters at the White House, at the U.S. Conference of Mayors, as well as in San Jose.
