Organizational History

In 1857 the San Francisco Board of Education established an evening school for current and prospective teachers in the city. The school became known as the Minns' Evening Normal School, named after the principal, Washington Minns. In 1862, the California State Legislature formally established Minns' school as the first California State Normal School. The school remained in San Francisco until the California State Legislature voted to move the Normal School to San José and provided the funds to construct a new building on Washington Square in San José. The State Normal School moved into temporary quarters in San José in 1871, and moved into the new building prior to the fall term in 1872.

In the early hours of February 10, 1880, a fire destroyed the Normal School building, which was regarded as one of the most significant wood buildings in the state, and cost approximately $285,000 to build. In the interim, classes moved to the high school building located on Santa Clara Street. Following the fire, there was a failed attempt to move the school to Los Angeles. As a compromise, the Branch State Normal School in Los Angeles was established, which eventually became the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA). The California State Legislature authorized $200,000 to construct a new building on the same site, which was completed in 1881, and was commonly referred to as the Second State Normal School.

In 1887 the California State Normal School was renamed the San José State Normal School, after the California State Legislature formally established a normal school in Chico and gave the Los Angeles Branch Normal School its independence.

The San Francisco Earthquake of 1906 caused major damage throughout the San Francisco Bay area. Although the San José State Normal School building initially appeared to be only lightly damaged by the quake, further inspection showed sufficient structural damage to declare it unsafe. The building was demolished, and construction began on a quadrangle-type structure similar to the quad at Stanford University. This building, with its signature tower, was completed in 1910.

In 1921 the various State Normal Schools were renamed State Teachers Colleges, reflecting the increased needs and curriculum requirements for the education of teachers. That same year, the San José Junior College was established, sharing the facilities and staff of the San José State Teachers College. The college began offering education-related bachelor's degrees at this time and the first degrees were conferred in 1923. In 1928 the college offered general academic bachelor's degrees, and formalized the merger of the junior college with the teachers college. The institution transformed from a vocational school to that of a full-fledged academic institution offering four year degrees. This change paved the way for a more formal curriculum and new programs, which led to another name change in 1935, when the California State Legislature renamed the San José State Teachers College to the San José State College.

In 1972 the school was renamed California State University, San José, a change long overdue since the institution had been providing university-level curriculum and degree programs for several decades. This change met fairly broad opposition from students, alumni, and faculty, since the institution had long been known as San José State. Their persistence paid off, and in 1974, the school was renamed San José State University.

The majority of images represented do not include information on the photographer. When available, the name of the photographer or photography studio is included. #### Scope and Content

This collection consists of a variety of visual materials depicting the buildings, people, and events of San José State University, and its previous incarnations: San José State College, San José State Teachers College, and the California State Normal School in San José and San Francisco. Some of the reproductions originated from school newspapers or catalogs. There are also a few drawings represented. The majority of the collection documents the history of the university, but also covers events or places in San José or Santa Clara County.

Arrangement

This collection was originally catalogued and arranged using two different schemas; one system organized some of the materials alphabetically by subject, and the other system used an alpha-numeric subject coding scheme. The arrangement of this collection follows the original schemas and consists of three series documenting 1860 to 2000: Series I, Photographs, Reprints and Newsclippings, 1860-2000, is arranged alphabetically by subject; Series II, Photographs, Reprints and Newsclippings, 1860-1977, is arranged by the alpha-numeric scheme; and Series III, Oversize Photographs and Reprints, 1875-1982, is arranged chronologically by general time period, then alphabetically by subject.

Related Material

Series I: Photographs, Reprints, and Newsclippings 1860-2000 (bulk 1890-1980)

Physical Description: 1 file drawer, 1 oversize flat storage box

Series Scope and Content Summary

This series consists of original and reproduction prints, oversize prints, panoramas, negatives, slides, reproduction drawings, and newspaper and magazine clippings depicting the campus, buildings, faculty, students, and events of San José State University, and its previous incarnations: San José State College, San José State Teachers College, and the California State Normal School in San José. Also in the collection are images of people, places, and events in San José and Santa Clara County. If the photographer or creator is known, he or she will be listed in the description.

This collection provides an array of images documenting San José State University. Of note is a set of photographs taken shortly after the 1906 Earthquake, depicting damage done by the earthquake in San José. Also of note are group photographs of some of the drama societies of the early 20th century, and of early 20th century San José State student life such as May Fete and Spardi Gras.

Series Notes:

The San José State University Archives holds a small collection of documents related to George E. Stone (folder 76) and a separate collection of his photographic slides.

The San José State University Archives holds a document related to the Sappho Club (group photo in Oversize Box 1).

Arrangement

This series was originally cataloged and arranged alphabetically by subject. In keeping with the original provenance, this series follows the original structure. The bulk of the collection is contained in standard file drawers. Access to the collection is provided at the folder level. All of the oversized materials are contained in a separate archival box and can be viewed at the container level.

Series II: Photographs, Reprints, and Newsclippings 1860-1977 (bulk 1890-1960)

Physical Description: 2 file drawers, 1 oversize flat storage box

Series Scope and Content Summary

This series consists of original and reproduction prints, oversize prints, panoramas, negatives, slides, reproduction drawings, and newspaper and magazine clippings depicting the campus, buildings, faculty, students, and events of San José State University, and its previous incarnations. In most cases the photographer is not identified, but where it is known, he or she will be listed in the description.

This series documents May Fete, a May Day festival that used to be held at San José State, a series of photographs taken by Professor J. E. Addicott for an exhibit of the school in the 1893 World's Fair, and images of the buildings that housed the State Normal School in its early history.

Arrangement

This series was originally arranged by an alphanumeric filing system. In order to maintain the provenance of the collection, this system has been left intact. The bulk of the collection is contained in standard file drawers. Access to the collection is provided at the folder level. All of the oversized materials are contained in a separate archival box and can be viewed at the container level. The folders are labeled according to the original filing scheme listed below:
