NOTES FROM THE EDITOR

Carlos S. Maldonado

I extend thanks to the various individuals who submitted newsletter items for publication in this issue of Noticias de NACCS.

I want to challenge NACCS members on two items.

First, I encourage NACCS members to contact the appropriate academic department or administrative unit at your school and propose that it become an institutional NACCS member. The revenue generated for NACCS through this effort can be significant. We have members throughout the U.S. and therefore NACCS can benefit greatly by being visible to our colleges and universities. This connection can also aid in Chicana/Chicano faculty recruitment by having your college/university place recruitment ads in our newsletter.

Additionally, NACCS can greatly benefit by enhancing communication between NACCS and our compañeros/as across the U.S. Information about local, and regional issues or raza achievements are helpful and uplifting particularly during these times of political conservatism.

Second, I also want to challenge NACCS members to please keep your membership and address current. Recently a compañero from the midwest complained that he was not receiving Noticias de NACCS. We followed up on his concern and informed him that he was not a NACCS member. We mailed him a complimentary copy of Noticias and encouraged him to become a member. Maintaining current membership and mailing address is critical for the NACCS National Office. Our NACCS membership data bank needs to be current and accurate. You can be helpful in this area. We are integrating a change of address item in Noticias beginning with this issue.

Please submit letters of critique which may be helpful in enhancing Noticias de NACCS.

Letter to the Editor

I am a 42 year old Chicana who has been married to her Chicano husband (David J. Salazar) for twenty-one years. We met in college at UCSD and married in 1974. We have walked through many seasons together.

With sadness we have witnessed the change of several organizations that were dedicated to Chicano issues change to generalized approaches by labeling themselves as "Hispanic" or "Latino" alliances.

Therefore, when I read through your recent newsletter (Fall 1995, Vol. 3, Nov. 1), and found the section reporting on the April 30, 1994 resolution to include the word "Chicana" to the title of the National Association for Chicano Studies, I was elated to see such an action taken.

Thank you for maintaining a structure with the appropriate name, and recognizing the significant contributions made by Chicanas in our struggle to survive in this world.

Good luck and may you all be blessed with spiritual guidance to continue our Chicano efforts.

Geraldine Salazar, Santa Fe, New Mexico.

JUDGE GUTS CORE OF PROP. 187

Ruling: State can't force agencies to report suspected undocumented immigrants. By Ken McLaughlin, Pamela Kramer and By Jeordan Legon

LOS ANGELES — Ruling that California had no right to set up its own immigration regulations, a federal judge Monday ripped the guts out of Proposition 187, the incendiary initiative approved by three-fifths of the state's voters last November.

In a 72-page decision that outraged the measure's boosters, Judge Mariana Pfaelzer struck down as unconstitutional its most controversial provision: the requirement that schools and social welfare agencies ask students and clients to prove they are in the country legally so that "suspected" undocumented immigrants be reported to state and federal authorities.

The California voters' overwhelming approval of Proposition 187 reflects their justifiable frustration with the federal government's inability to enforce the immigration laws effectively," Pfaelzer said. "No matter how serious the problem may be, however, the authority to regulate immigration belongs exclusively to the federal government and state agencies are not permitted to assume that authority."

An army of attorneys battling the initiative in state and federal courts hailed the ruling as a legal harbinger of the measure's ultimate demise.

There's no question that she has cut the heart out of 187," said Robert Rubin of the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights in San Francisco. "I think her clear message is that our doctors and teachers have their hands full with traditional functions and should not be asked to be cops before the INS."

Crowded Mark Rosenbaum, legal director for the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California: "This ruling today means that the Statue of Liberty stands for more than photo-op sessions for the governor," referring to Pete Wilson's decision to formally announce his now-defunct bid for the presidency in front of the statue in New York Harbor.

Wilson, who made Proposition 187 a major issue in his successful 1994 re-election campaign, said he was disappointed with Pfaelzer's ruling.

"It's frustrating the will of the people of California," he said at a Beverly Hills fund-raiser for Republican presidential hopeful Bob Dole. "This means it will be in the courts for several years before the issue is resolved." The governor said he will focus on pursuing federal funds to reimburse California for the cost of providing services to undocumented immigrants.

Lungren may appeal - Attorney General Dan Lungren, also at the rally, said his office would concentrate on defending portions of the law left intact for now by Pfaelzer. And eventually, he said, the state will appeal her ruling to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary.

In saying that it was unconstitutional to ban undocumented children from public elementary and secondary schools, Pfaelzer relied on a 1982 U.S. Supreme Court ruling in a Texas case that forced states to pay for the education of such children.

But the judge, who put most of 187 on legal hold soon after it was passed, did not strike down provisions that deny higher education benefits to undocumented students. And she said the state may be able to deny benefits under programs that it funds on its own. If state agencies, in verifying eligibility for services and benefits, rely on federal determinations of status made by the INS, then they might be constitutionally able to deny benefits, she wrote.

Most of it never enacted - for now, however, the decision will have no practical effect because most of the measure's provisions were never enacted. The only provisions that Pfaelzer has allowed to take effect make the use or manufacture of fraudulent immigration documents a state crime.

Sally Vaughn of San Jose, who gathered signatures to get Proposition 187 on the ballot, called Monday's decision an affront to democracy. "I think this certainly shatters any illusions that we are a free people with a right to self-determination," said Vaughn, spokeswoman for the Cupertino-based United Citizens for Immigration Control. "The ACLU shysters, working in collusion with one corrupt federal judge, have demolished the concept of government by the people. This is a tyranny. I think now is the time for every American working man and woman to lay down their tools in a massive statewide tax revolt and say, "Hell no. We won't take it anymore."

Cheers over the news - At Delia's Furniture in San Jose, though, employees and customers gathered around the Spanish-language television news to learn what the judge had decided.

Several employees cheered. Others shook hands. "We've been so worried about this for so long now that it's a great relief to hear this," said owner Presentacion Dominguez, 51. "We knew all along that this was unconstitutional, but we weren't sure whether the judge would be fair and rule in our favor."

But the legal issues are hardly settled. Now a trial must be held on other legal questions — most important, whether the state has a right to deny medical and welfare benefits to undocumented immigrants. And eventually the results of that trial can be appealed to the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals and, if necessary, to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Rick Oltman, head of the Northern California Yes on 187/Save Our State committee, said Pfaelzer's ruling was not unexpected. "She was hand-picked by our opponents specifically because she is a liberal, pro-illegal-alien judge," he said. Eventually, he said, "we can get this case away from her and . . . at least get a fair hearing."

Oltman said Pfaelzer insulted California voters by using the "pathetic" term "undocumented newcomers." "The term is illegal alien," he said. "That's a legal term. It would be helpful if our federal judges were more interested in enforcing the law than being politically correct."

POLITICIZING NACCS

By Raoul Contreras

This issue of Noticias de NACCS re-prints a statement (initially distributed through a special October edition of the newsletter) by the site committee of the 1996 National Conference. In that statement the site committee elaborates upon the explicitly political oriented conference theme, and outlines some "New Ideas for The Chicago National Conference."

The gist of these "new ideas" is an alteration of the usual structure of the three-day conference agenda. Through these changes the site committee hopes to facilitate a more genuine mass participation by the general NACCS membership in elaborating the meaning of the politically oriented conference theme.

There is an objective, or more accurately still another hope, behind this effort to enhance mass participation in elaborating the meaning of the conference theme. The site committee is motivated by a desire to use the Chicago conference to infuse new life into our organizational identity as a community of politically oriented scholars, staff/administrators, students, and community allies.

A problem in this regard, real or imagined, is that for too many of us the three days at the National Conference is the only time and /or perceived opportunity to be a National Association for Chicana and Chicano Studies. For the rest of the year there is no material expression of what bonds us politically across regions, within localities, or too often, even across the same campus or between our "occupational distinctions" as faculty, staff/administrators, and students. The idea behind the agenda innovations is that the organized social interaction focusing on the conference theme can be mobilized to regenerate organization wide our "spirit of unity," self-consciousness of "common ideals and goals," and, most importantly the "links and mechanisms" of social organization through which individuals can contribute to and be part of a year-long political National Association for Chicana and Chicano Studies.

The point of this summary on a statement that is already being re-printed in this issue of Noticias de NACCS is to emphasize that it expresses an idea and an intention. The site committee is without spoons or feeders. It can guarantee only its commitment to try and create a conference environment where a renewed "politicizing of NACCS" can occur.

The success of this venture depends on the initiative and the leadership that the NACCS membership, and especially its "activists" and "organizers," of which there are both many and too few, brings with them to Chicago. The site committee urges you to review the statement and "talk it up" through your personal contacts, networks, e-mail, etc. and encourage and suggest modes of participation at the Chicago conference to others.

Researching Chicano Communities By Irene Blea

This is a multifaceted approach to understanding one of the nation's largest ethnic communities. Blea incorporates community social history, physical, psychological, and spiritual space. The book strives to teach the student how to do research in an ethnic community. It also describes what is already understood about those communities and defines the nature of the 25 year old discipline of Chicano Studies. The use of the Chicana feminist perspective lends not only a gender role analysis, but also demonstrates the structure and function of the balance of personal and social control within the context of the community. The book is published by Praeger Publishers 1995.

Understanding Older Chicanas by Elisa Facio

Center for Studies of Ethnicity and Race in America,
University of Colorado at Boulder

The first volume of its kind, Understanding Older Chicanas reports on Chicanas' lives, status, and public policy needs. Chicana elderly tend to be poor, reflecting the economic position of Chicanos in American society; they also tend to be stereotyped as widows and grandmothers, reflecting the cultural values of Mexican American society. This work lends understanding of how they gain the personal and financial resources they require. Understanding Older Chicanas also relates how scholars and public policymakers have previously understood Chicana elderly, provides new data on the social meaning of Chicana old age, and points out the implications of that meaning for future policymakers.

Chicano Literature in ETS' Advanced Placement Reading List

We are pleased to inform the NACCS membership of the recent adoption by the national Educational Testing Service (ETS) of the inclusion of Chicano authors to their Recommended Reading List for the Advanced Placement (AP) exam taken by high school seniors to receive college and university credit. ETS is the testing service in Princeton, New Jersey known for the SAT and the ACT exams, among others, including the AP exam. Please assist us in announcing this information. ETS has been encouraging increased participation of Chicanos and other Latinos in its programs and services.

When Luis Torres served as NACCS Chair, on behalf of NACCS and with the input of the Coordinating Committee and Chicano literary scholars, he made recommendations to ETS that Chicano authors be included in the Recommended Reading List for AP; the booklet, "Advanced Placement Course Description, English" goes out to high school teachers throughout the U.S. and abroad. Approximately 140,000 students take the Literature exam and 35,000 the language exam annually..

Of seven Chicano authors we recommended, the ETS College Board has now included five, in various genres, for the May, 1996 and May, 1997 exam and following. The authors are as follows:

- 1) Gloria Anzaldua, in both Expository Literature and Criticism.
- 2) Lorna Dee Cervantes, in Poetry.
- 3) Luis Valdez, in Drama.
- 4) Rudolfo Anaya, Prose Fiction (Novel and Short Story)
- 5) Sandra Cisneros, Prose Fiction (Novel and Short Story)

A Chicano Literature AP class in high school can therefore prepare the students for the AP English exam by teaching these and other Chicano authors. Depending on the student's score, the student can then receive college or university credit in English. In addition, as a result of collaboration by Ex-officio chair Torres and members of the Puerto Rican Studies Association (PRSA) along with Puerto Rican scholars he also recommended four Puerto Rican authors, two of whom were also selected for the AP Reading List:

- 1) Jesus Colon, Expository Literature.
- 2) Judith Ortiz Cofer, Autobiographers and Diarists.

For more information contact Prof. Luis Torres, Chicano Studies Department, Metropolitan State College, Denver.

Colorado's K-12 Curriculum, Chicano History and Literature

Colorado NACCS members and various representatives of other Chicano organizations have over the last few years recommended Chicano Studies curricula for Colorado's public schools through the Colorado Academic Standards Act, the state's version of the national Goals 2000 project. The revised Standards have been recently approved by the Colorado Department of Education (CDE). NACCS Ex-Officio Chair Luis Torres, NACCS Colorado student representative LeRoy Lemos, and other members on behalf of NACCS were heavily involved in efforts to make recommendations to the CDE Board concerning materials for such inclusion.

While the results of such efforts have been limited, some advancement has been made to include Chicano Studies in Colorado's K-12 curricula, especially in the content areas of History and Reading and Writing. While unfortunately the Reading and Writing area revision does not specifically refer to Chicanos, it does call for the students in K-12 to "read classic and contemporary literature of the United States about the experiences and traditions of diverse ethnic groups." Among other such comments, it also states that the students should be able to develop and support "a thesis about the craft and significance of particular works of literature, both classic and contemporary, from a variety of ethnic writers."

The History standard in its revised, adopted version now calls for example for K-4 students to be able to describe "the history, interactions, and contributions of the various peoples and cultures that have lived in or migrated to the area that is now Colorado (for example African Americans, Asian Americans, European Americans, Latino Americans, and Native Americans.)" It also calls for 9-12 students to be able to describe "the history, interactions and contributions of the various peoples and cultures that have lived in or migrated to the area that is now the United States, including African, Asian, European, Hispanic, and Native Americans." Also, earlier drafts of the History standards stated that the Colonial Era began in 1620 with the Mayflower landing; it now introduces the Colonial Era as beginning in 1500, a revision directed at calling for the teaching of the Spanish Colonial Era.

Chicano representatives are continuing with efforts to broaden inclusion of Chicano history and cultural content in K-12 including in the forthcoming revisions of the Music, Art, Foreign Language, and Civics areas, and developing Curriculum Guides for History, Reading and Writing, and the additional areas. To offer the NACCS FOCO members advice and recommendations, please contact the Colorado representatives on the NACCS Coordinating Committee (CC): Elisa Facio, Estevan Flores, LeRoy Lemos, and Luis Torres. Refer to the CC list of addresses.

Chicano Scholar Defeats UC Regents

by Mary Pardo

Department of Chicano/a Studies at Cal State Northridge.

Four months after the Regents of the University of California took their infamous vote to abolish affirmative action, these same Regents were dramatically humbled by a small band of persistent Chicanos/as and their supporters. In a legal battle that lasted almost five years, noted historian Rudy Acuña successfully challenged UC's discriminatory hiring practices. The landmark victory came October 30 when an eight-member, multiethnic federal jury ruled unanimously that the University of California, Santa Barbara had discriminated when it refused to appoint Dr. Acuña to its Chicano Studies Department.

Acuña's victory also represented a challenge to the elitist definition of "scholarship" applied by so many universities across the nation. It affirmed the value of Chicano Studies, and our right to accurate political history rather than the so-called truths which reinforce the subordination of people of color.

A pioneer Chicano Studies scholar, Acuña has played an instrumental role in building the largest such department in the country, at California State University, Northridge. His book Occupied America is a core textbook for Chicano history courses at many universities. Through his research and personal activism, Acuña has always encouraged debate and inspired students to challenge inequality. He has published many articles in the Los Angeles Times and Herald Examiner, and been arrested more than once for political activism.

At the University of California, Santa Barbara, the chair of the Chicano Studies Department, Dr. Yolanda Broyles-Gonzales, had nominated Acuña for a position in her department, but she was overruled by an ad hoc committee of three white men in secret proceedings. Protest demonstrations followed, beginning in 1991. Acuña filed a lawsuit claiming discrimination on the basis of race, national origin, political orientation and age. The judge dismissed the first two charges, while the third was lost through a procedural error; only ageism remained.

Thanks to a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision, UC was compelled to let Acuña's attorneys review the secret committee's documents. According to attorney Moises Vasquez, the group had expected that the "inappropriate and illegal references in the review documents would never be seen by a jury". On paper the ad hoc committee made it clear that the reason to veto his appointment was his pro-active approach to teaching, and called him an "inveterate polemicist, pamphleteer, and cult professor" (and a "master spirit"). With contempt for Acuña's scholarship, the documents also referred to the entire Chicano Studies field as "inchoate". Although Dr. Acuña never included his age (59 at that time) in his curriculum vitae, the review committee inappropriately referred to it at least three times; this became key to the case.

During the trial, a number of distinguished scholars testified as expert witnesses for Acuña. Dr. Ramon Ruiz, a historian and professor emeritus at UC, San Diego, stated that, "Acuña's research opened up the national debate on the Chicano experience in the United States." The National Association of Chicana/o Studies saw the negative assessment of Acuña's scholarship as a direct challenge to the entire field and part of a broader assault on ethnic studies, affirmative action and civil rights.

The campaign supporting Acuña's lawsuit revealed his ties to the Chicano/Latino community. In contrast to the UC's deep pockets (it spent an estimated $4 million on its defense), the Acuña case was financed by small but numerous fund-raisers organized by the FOR (friends of Rudy) Acuña committee. His attorneys donated their services. Members of Mothers of East Los Angeles, Santa Isabel, Community Labor Strategy Center, the Coalition of Immigrant Workers Association, the Latino gay and lesbian community, and labor unions filled the courtroom seats daily, along with teachers, journalists, writers, students and noted political figures.

After the jury verdict supporting Acuña, Judge Audrey Collins announced she would decide on December 4 whether Acuña should be granted the position at UCSB. If so, he would also receive $90,000 from UC, if not, he would be awarded $325,000 from UC. By the end of November, UC must decide whether to appeal the verdict or not.

The Jury's federal court decision allows Acuña to pursue legal action against UC in state court, and seek punitive damages. While the case has meant great personal sacrifice for the family, Dr. Acuña says he will use any monetary award from it to establish a foundation to promote other legal challenges to educational discrimination. If he does pursue a state case, Acuña hopes to prove that UC systematically discriminates in hiring Latino and other professors of color. Some 2 percent of UC professors are of Mexican origin, less than 1 percent Chicana.

After the recent victory Acuña commented on how many people including "at least 30 attorneys told me that you can't beat the UC." "Others said I should forget it and do 'better things' with my time. But I can think of nothing more important than challenging the discriminatory employment practices and review process at the UC." In this and other ways, the Acuña case has exposed how academic institutions, with their particular definitions of "knowledge," act as agents of social control - a control now being defied by so many youth and adults all over the country today.

A Note From the New Chicana Caucus Chair

Maria Montes de Oca Ricks

After more than a decade of selfless service, Cynthia Orozco has stepped down as Chair of the Chicana Caucus. Orozco, attended her first NACCS conference as an undergraduate in 1979 at the invitation of Estevan Flores. Cynthia has been a presenter and/or organizer of panels at every conference but one since 1979. Her topics have ranged from "Institutionalizing Chicana Studies" (1986), to the first session organized by a heterosexual person on homophobia (1992).

Orozco is a founder of the Chicana Caucus, and she was a plenary speaker at the 1984 NACCS Conference in Austin, Texas. That historic conference, the first dedicated to women, saw the first Chicana Plenary ever, and the first formal meeting of the Chicana Caucus. Orozco authored both the resolution providing NACCS guidelines for the Chicana Caucus, and the sexual harassment resolution; and her plenary address, "Sexism in Chicano Studies and the Community," was published in the proceedings of the conference, Chicana Voices: Intersections of Race, Class and Gender.

Indefatigable, Orozco has continued her activism as well as her scholarly work. Her latest work, a historiography of Chicanas in voluntary associations and politics between 1870 and 1990, will be Vol. 10 in the Renato Rosaldo Lecture Series Monographs. She steps down from the leadership of the Chicana Caucus—but not from her ongoing commitment to it—because of the need to attend to the many projects she has put on hold while serving Chicanas in the Association. Cynthia, you have both nuestro cariño, y el agradecimiento mas sincero for the many years of service, and for showing us the way.

COLORADO REGIONAL REPORT

by Elisa Facio
Colorado Regional Rep.

On Saturday, December 2nd, the Colorado Regional FOCO of NACCS held their fall meeting at Metro State University in Denver. Our gathering provided us the opportunity to update the region about issues discussed at the NACCS Coordinating meeting (Chicago, 11/95), and the current status of education for Chicanas and Chicanos ranging from K-12.

The Colorado region, not unlike other regions, is concerned with the educational experiences of our children and the future of Chicana and Chicano Studies. There was strong consensus that if we do not invest in the education of our children, the future of Chicana and Chicano Studies will be jeopardized. Additionally, it was also expressed that teaching, conducting research, and working toward the establishment of Chicana and Chicano Studies requires that we create educational coalitions of parents, teachers, students, and community activists involved with all levels of education for Chicanas and Chicanos.

The Latino Educational Coalition was invited to inform us about current educational activities taking place in the Denver community. The Latino Educational Coalition is an alliance of Chicano/Latino organizations, business people, parents, students, citizens and public/civic leaders. The Coalition commits itself to finding solutions to the problems facing our children in the Denver Public Schools. One of the coalition's goals states: "Ensure our youth's academic achievement be at a level that enables them to enter college prepared to be successful without remediation or enter the workforce with the necessary skills to participate productively." NACCS members felt, as an association, we could be most instrumental in this area given Luis Torres' involvement in Colorado's Academic Content Standards for K—12. In order to successfully meet this goal, a restructuring of the overall curriculum is in order.

Dr. Torres informed us that over the last two years or so several Chicano groups in Colorado have been working toward establishing Chicano Studies curricula in K—12. Detailed discussions on Policies/Procedures for Selecting and Adopting Instructional Materials in the Denver Public Schools took place among those present. We came to the agreement that NACCS, the Latino Educational Coalition, and the Committee on Academic Standards would begin to work toward accomplishing the goal stated in the preceding paragraph.

Additionally, there was discussion about the Chicago meetings, and plans are underway to encourage and assist people to attend. Also, the Colorado Regional FOCO expressed some concern about next year's meeting. If a decision on next year's site is not made by March, Colorado will propose that NACCS consider holding dialogues/discussions/meetings with government officials in Washington D.C. in the areas of education, immigration, affirmative action, and health care. Colorado will present this proposal at the national meeting.

Finally, we are planning a regional conference in late February, where we intend to address K-12 education by inviting parents, teachers and communities outside the universities. Also, the traditional NACCS forums will be provided for sharing research and its implications for Chicana and Chicano studies, as well as our status in higher education.

REPORT FROM THE NORTHERN CALIFORNIA STUDENT REPRESENTATIVES

by Daniel Santillano y Jennie Marie Luna

Dear NACCS student members,

As we anticipate the National Conference in Chicago, we are pleased that many students from the Northern California FOCO will be attending. A major project that we as FOCO students have been working on is the need for Chicana/o Studies at the high school level. Several schools in the Bay Area currently have Chicana/o Studies as a result of protests, rallies and coordination with school administrations. New ideas for curriculum have emerged from these efforts. We hope that new curriculum guidelines are generated in Chicago. Please feel free to contact one of us if you would like additional information.

P.S. Casa Joaquin Murrieta, an independent Chicano co-op of UC Berkeley, will have their annual retreat at the conference. The co-op has 40 residents! California will truly be represented.

Have a wonderful holiday season!

MAPPING STRATEGIES:
NACCS AND THE CHALLENGE OF RACIST POLICIES

NEW IDEAS FOR THE CHICAGO NATIONAL CONFERENCE

With the theme Mapping Strategies: NACCS and the Challenge of Racist Policies as the theme for the XXXIII NACCS Conference in Chicago, the Site Committee wants to initiate a broad dialogue within the association on the question of how NACCS should respond to the general trend of racist reaction as manifested, for example, by the Proposition 187 and "Anti-Affirmative Action" social movements in California.

In the discussion that generated the theme, the Site Committee agreed that it would encompass two related but distinguishable concerns. The first is self-evident in the language of the theme, "mapping NACCS strategies" (or a strategy) to contest the rise of racist policies. The second concern is NACCS itself, in relationship to the design or development of such strategies.

As you know, the basic premise of our formation as an association of Chicana/o scholars, academic staff/administrators, students, and community allies is that we are an organization "rooted in the political life of the community and oriented toward the solution of social problems." Thus, the theme of the 1996 National Conference will also imply self-reflection about ourselves as a political organization; in other words, the issue of who and what is NACCS that gives it the capacity to be an actor in relation to the events manifesting the rise of racism in U.S. American society. Consequently, the speakers at the main conference plenary will address each of the aspects of the conference theme.

The Site Committee feels that in previous conferences the significance or meaning of the theme for the general NACCS membership has rarely extended beyond listening to presentations by speakers at the main plenary. Therefore, we will be making some innovations in the schedule of concurrent sessions that will give greater emphasis to the conference theme. By altering the form of our typical conference agenda, we expect to 1) allow the theme to permeate the entire conference (or at least more than in the past), and 2) encourage general membership dialogue and participation in terms of the conference theme.

The Site Committee will bring together these conference-theme proposals in the first set of concurrent sessions (Concurrent Sessions II) following the main plenary. The plan is to devote this entire block of concurrent sessions to those who have indicated they want to participate in elaborating the meaning of the conference theme through their papers, panels, round-tables and workshops. The idea is to involve us all simultaneously and in a genuinely participatory sense in the work of making this theme have a real significance in the life of the association.

In addition, to introduce a more genuine dialogue in terms of the conference theme, we will schedule a set of two to four "Plenary Theme Workshops." These workshops will run concurrently on the second day (Friday) of the conference and replace a regular set of concurrent sessions. The idea of the "Plenary Theme Workshops" is to encourage, facilitate, and give preference to both interactive discussion and common activity as a single body in developing the significance of the theme. Two of the workshops will focus on the two components of the conference theme.

Finally, the plan to make some changes in our usual conference agenda is motivated by our desire to renew, nurture and "fire-up" our sense and our premise of being a community of politically oriented Chicana/o scholars, academic staff/administrators, students, and community allies. For too many of us, the National Conference is the only time and the only perceived opportunity to be a National Association for Chicana and Chicano Studies. Our intent is to generate, through the social interaction of the conference, a spirit of unity, a self-consciousness of common ideals and goals, and material links and mechanisms of political organization. These are the necessary conditions for being a "year-long" National Association for Chicana and Chicano Studies.

Your response to our request for papers on our theme has been tremendous. A large number of the excellent papers, panels, and round tables proposals we have received focus on the conference theme. And we appreciate it! The conference promises to be exciting and challenging.

We'll see you in Chicago in March!

EXCITING EVENTS AT NACCS '95 CHICAGO . . .

This year, the NACCS National Conference, in conjunction with the National Latino Communications Center (NLCC), will host a special screening of Chicano! The History of the Mexican American Civil Rights Movement, a four-part national public television series scheduled to premiere in April 1996. Chicano!, a co-production of NLCC and Galan Production, Inc., examines the historical roots of the Chicano movement during the years 1965 to 1975, a period in Mexican American history that did not garner as many headlines as did other social movements during the sixties. This historical series, never before brought to the light of the national public television audience, probes the profound impact the movement had on subsequent generations of Mexican Americans as well as on mainstream U.S. Conference participants will be able to view a special 30 minute segment of this landmark series, and meet the director and producer of the series at a reception following the viewing. The producers and academic consultants for the series will also present a panel session to discuss the preparation and filming of Chicano!

Preparations and planning are also underway for a tour of Chicano murals in Chicago's Mexican neighborhoods on Sunday morning, March 24. Plan to stay an extra day to enjoy the art of our famous muralists. This art exhibit will be outdoors!

Panel, paper, and round-table proposals have poured in. Scholars such as Rudy Acuna, Mario Barrera, Luis Leal, Ada Sosa Ridell, John Garcia, Adelaida del Castillo, David Maciel, Deena Gonzalez, Pat Zavella, Antonia Castaneda, Christine Sierra, Emma Perez, and many, many more are expected at the conference. Authors Alejandro Morales, Helena Maria Viramontes, and Chicago's Luis Rodriguez will be on hand also. And don't forget that at this conference we will celebrate Rudy's victory over the University of California System!!!!

Make your hotel reservations early (the block of rooms available at the Congress Hotel during the busy spring conference season has a limited number) and pre-register for the conference. Pack your coat; it can be chilly in Chicago in March.
