Troops to be sent to California border

BY CHIOMA LEWIS

California Gov. Jerry Brown announced Wednesday he is officially deploying 400 California National Guard troops to the United States-Mexico border.

Earlier in the month, President Donald Trump signed a memorandum to send approximately 4,000 National Guard troops to states on the Southern border to help secure it.

The president's April 4 decision to deploy the troops was made in an attempt to prevent illegal immigration and drug trafficking.

President Trump's decision is a memo that same day that read: "The combination of work that would merit federal funding to add approximately 400 Guard members statewide to supplement the staffing of our ongoing program to combat transnational crime.

Some members of the San Jose State community support sending troops to the border.

I believe that sending additional troops to the border is long overdue," U.S. Army Reserve member and SJCC alumna Morgan Kimbarow said.

Kimbarow added that his personal views don’t represent those of the Army, but he supports the troops' presence at the border.

"A country that doesn't protect its borders isn't a country," Kimbarow said.

Brown in the only California's "sanctuary state" policy that work to protect immigrants by refusing to enforce federal immigration laws. The Trump administration filed a lawsuit against the state in March because of its sanctuary state laws.

The state of California was the last border state to announce it would send troops to the border.

callahan@spartandaily.com
Workshop aims to educate Spartans on pay gap

BY KRISTEL RODRIGUEZ

SPEAKERS addressed the pay disparity between Latin women and their non-white male counterparts at the "Know Your Worth Workshop" held in the Biscocca room at breakfast Wednesday night.

Latinas in a gender-neutral term that aims to be more inclusive toward the many intersecting identities in Latin-American communities.
The masculine version of words in Spanish tend to be considered gender-neutral, so this is a way to protect against that asignated masculinity and to promote a language of gendered language.
The Twin Valley Latino Network (LAN) organized the event to connect fellow Spartans, alumni and professionals with resources to fight the wage gap that Latina community get fair pay.

The Department of Labor, Hispanic women only paid 34 percent of what white men were paid in 2016.

If you want to negotiate for fair pay, you must be prepared for your job interview.
A key step is to openly reject the use of neutral, so this is a way to protect against that asignated masculinity and pay.

You can get the title of a job, "Zamanjob interview.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The masculine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.

The feminine version of a word can
be used to signal the gender of the person named.
MOVIE REVIEW

BBR BEIN Staff Writer

HBO released a new documentary last week that debunked some of the myths about the larger-than-life wrestling legend “André the Giant,” while giving an inside look at the life of André Roussimoff.

The documentary portrays two very different sides of Roussimoff.

The first side was André the Giant, the first-ever inductee into the World Wrestling Entertainment (WWE) Hall of Fame, who partied and was a first-class entertainer.

The other side was just Roussimoff, a man who was so large in size he could not escape his body. Roussimoff was born in 1946 and grew up on a farm in Molinets, France. Because of a rare pituitary gland issue known as “acromegaly,” Roussimoff’s body continued to grow throughout his entire life.

Roussimoff was 7 feet 4 inches tall and weighed over 500 pounds in 1993, there have been many stories told about Roussimoff’s health. Since Roussimoff’s death in 1993, there have been many stories told about his life, and his legend has grown even larger than he was. The documentary shows how diffcult it was for Roussimoff to travel. He couldn’t fi t into any seats on airplanes. Additionally, he couldn’t fi t into any airplane lavatory so someone would bring him a bucket while someone else held a curtain up just so he could go to the bathroom. Tim White, one of Roussimoff’s longtime friends, even mentioned that Roussimoff went to the bathroom on a regular basis.

For a professional athlete as decorated as André the Giant was, he lived a sad life that was unaware of before I watched the documentary. I would recommend this documentary to anyone who enjoys wrestling and wants to learn more about André the Giant.

Director Jason Hehir spent much time focusing on one of Roussimoff’s most popular rumors, his ability to drink 106 cans of beer in one night. The documentary also goes into extensive detail about Roussimoff’s health. He knew he would not live a long life. Roussimoff didn’t think he would outlive his career. Roussimoff was so large in size he could not fi t in many cars and he would have to purchase two seats on airplanes.

If you like 1930s jazz music, suspenseful crime, and Hollywood Postman Always Rings Twice” you can defnitely catch your attention.

The play is based on the 1934 crime novel written by James A. Cain. It’s running at the San Jose Stage Company through May 6, and is directed by Ken Kelleher.

The plot involves two people by making sure they keep their all the characters. There are even actors who play multiple roles and execute them so genuine and pure. He doesn’t deserve anything but the two adulators plan to do him.

The French wrestler André the Giant attacks Jake the Snake during a wrestling match in the 1980s.

It is clear that André the Giant understood what sports entertainment is all about. He knew that anyone who ran his business, his personality helped him become a global celebrity during the 1970s and 1980s. Considered the “Eighth Wonder of the World” André Roussimoff’s most popular rumors, his drinking habits, his health, his life, and his legend has grown even larger than he was. The documentary shows how diffcult it was for Roussimoff to travel. He couldn’t fi t into any seats on airplanes. Additionally, he couldn’t fi t into any airplane lavatory so someone would bring him a bucket while someone else held a curtain up just so he could go to the bathroom. Tim White, one of Roussimoff’s longtime friends, even mentioned that Roussimoff went to the bathroom on a regular basis.

For a professional athlete as decorated as André the Giant was, he lived a sad life that was unaware of before I watched the documentary. I would recommend this documentary to anyone who enjoys wrestling and wants to learn more about André the Giant.

Director Jason Hehir spent much time focusing on one of Roussimoff’s most popular rumors, his ability to drink 106 cans of beer in one night. The documentary also goes into extensive detail about Roussimoff’s health. He knew he would not live a long life. Roussimoff didn’t think he would outlive his career. Roussimoff was so large in size he could not fi t in many cars and he would have to purchase two seats on airplanes.

If you like 1930s jazz music, suspenseful crime, and Hollywood Postman Always Rings Twice” you can defnitely catch your attention.

The play is based on the 1934 crime novel written by James A. Cain. It’s running at the San Jose Stage Company through May 6, and is directed by Ken Kelleher.

The plot involves two people by making sure they keep their all the characters. There are even actors who play multiple roles and execute them so genuine and pure. He doesn’t deserve anything but the two adulators plan to do him.

The French wrestler André the Giant attacks Jake the Snake during a wrestling match in the 1980s.
Food and drinks that will make you blush

BY AMANDA WHITAKER STAFF WRITER

If you’re looking for a place to unwind with your co-workers after a long day of work or a fun night out with your friends, Blush Ice Bar and Raw Kitchen is the place to go.

Blush serves a variety of different raw seafoods, mainly sushi. I went during happy hour and luckily for me, everything I ordered was on the happy hour menu so my entire meal was half price.

I ordered the Blush cocktail, sushi tacos and the rose roll.

The cocktail was made with Passion Vodka, Lime juice and Cranberry Frosted Ice. It was basically a fresh flavored cocktail topped with a cranberry slushy and had a sugar-coated rim.

I've never had anything like it before but it was delicious and quite strong, which is exactly how I like my drinks.

The rose roll came with three mini crispy tacos. The tacos were made with seared tuna, one with wasabi and one with crab.

They were all great and the tuna and salmon were perfectly cooked.

I then ordered the rose roll with a wasabi aioli that enhanced the flavor of the taco. I could have ordered two more of these. They’re a great appetizer and nice for sharing.

The last dish I ordered was the rose roll which came with spicy tuna, crab, avocado and spicy mayo. I don’t know what they put in that spicy mayo sauce, but I would purchase a bottle of it if I could.

This roll was amazing, if you like tuna and a lot of spice I highly recommend trying this roll.

Blush is an elegant lounge that has a laid back feel to it.

No matter what time of the day you stop by, the space is always lit up by the modern light fixtures that dangle from the ceiling and the pink neon lights that hang above the bar.

The lighting really sets the mood and creates a fun and flirty atmosphere making you feel as though you’re in a lounge in Las Vegas.

Blush is located in San Pedro Square Market. For those who have never been to San Pedro Square Market, the building is one of two buildings that both serve food and drinks.

The first building is located on San Pedro Street and the second building extends to Almaden Avenue.

Blush is located in the second building, just past the outside seating area.

Most of the food vendors in the market don’t have their own seating area.

Guests typically order their food and have to find a place to sit.

However, Blush has its own little seating area.

It has its own little terrace with multiple TV screens, making it a perfect spot to grab a drink and watch the game.

It is a nice touch because it allows you to see the entire lounge space.

Blush also has specific seating for people who call ahead to make reservations.

They also have two different bars with open seating and high-top tables and chairs for walk-in guests.

The high-top seating is a nice touch because it allows you to see the entire lounge space.

The lounge is also filled with multiple TV screens, making it a perfect spot to grab a drink and watch the game.

On one side of the lounge, there is a quartz garage door that takes place for what would be a wall.

This is a cool feature to the lounge especially on a warm summer day workers are able to slide the door open and guests are able to sit outside in the common area.

I highly recommend visiting Blush if you haven’t already.

The restaurant is open Monday through Thursday 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., Friday and Saturday 11 a.m. to 2 a.m. and Sunday 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.

Follow Amanda on Twitter @AmandaWhitDaily

MOVIE REVIEW

‘Truth or Dare’ is painfully predictable and obvious

BY KAYLEE LAWLER CONTRIBUTING WRITER

In the teen horror, ‘Truth or Dare,’ a group of college students head to Mexico during spring break and come back with an evil entity that is possessing their truth or dare game.

The rules are that you tell a hurtful truth, if not you die, or you perform a deadly dare, if you don’t complete the dare, you die. If you don’t complete either, you die.

‘Truth or Dare’ is a painfully obvious movie from the traditional characters rules to the looming presence of technology used by the characters.

Olivia, played by Lucy Hale, is the innocent humanitarian who stays for her volunteers. She is taken up a spring break trip to Mexico by her over-haughty best friend Marky, played by Violet Beane.

On the last day of spring break, the group is wrapping up their night at a bar where Olivia meets a questionable but predictable trouble making individual, London Libson’s character, Carter. Carter leads the friends to an abandoned Mission on a dark hillside to complete his dare in trapping the friends in the game of truth or dare.

When they get back to school, strangers on campus or in bars with demented smiles ask them, “truth or dare?”

There were multiple issues with this movie, as the producers seemed to be in a hurry to appeal to the next generation of thrill-seekers.

Examples of this include: the relationship between Hale’s character, the presence of phones and technology, what an average college student looks like, and the movie’s predictability with plenty of plot holes.

All the way to the movie, Hale and Beane’s characters friendship is an emotional roller coaster with Hale’s character Olivia coming to Hale’s character Marky to expose a disturbing truth resulting in Marky walking out on the group, with Hale simply being torn between her extreme vacillations.

While the truths uncovered were interesting, the characters were very immature and doesn’t think clearly, especially when lives are at stake.

Technology in “Truth or Dare” is seen as a character itself, often used in the movie as a communication between the group of friends or the evil entity reaching out with a truth or dare text message.

As our heroes were trying to find out who could save them, their idea of investigating was looking up names on Facebook.

The idea of making the ending into a viral video to include the audience into the film was confusing and overdue.

Right from the start, when the scene opened up to Hale’s innocent character Olivia partying with her friends, it is clear who was the virgin, the jock, the fool, the slut, the jock, the fool, etc.

The choice of clothing, manners and relationships smelled far in who was in, who was out and who was to survive within the first 20 minutes of the film.

My advice is to watch the trailer. It explains the whole plot for this predictable movie. Spend your money on a quality scary movie, such as “The Blair Witch Place,” on date night.

Follow Kaylee on Twitter @KayleeLawler

GREAT EATS

“Blush Ice Bar & Raw Kitchen”

Cuisine: Sea food

Location: 100 North Almaden Ave. #160, San Jose, Calif.

Price:

Follow Amanda on Twitter @AmandaWhitDaily

Curious about Summer Session?

Sign up for updates!
OPINION

Should drug users be given food stamps?

Even addicts deserve to eat

Andrew Glenn  STAFF WRITER

LimeBike scooters are making students much lazier

Motorized scooters are making students much lazier

The Trump Administration is considering a plan that would require food stamp recipients to undergo drug testing in order to receive their compensation.

The Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) is a government-funded program that provides assistance for people with low incomes to buy food. Using drugs can be bad and disastrous for abusers’ lives and the lives of the people around them. However, withholding someone’s source of food is immoral. Does someone who uses drugs not deserve to eat?

Watching too much television is a bad decision. Buying junk food is a bad decision. Why should only drug users be punished?

I am not saying drug users should be tested to provide assistance for low-income individuals.

I do not think drugs are free. We have never paid for drugs in my life. I have never used any drugs that I couldn’t have paid for myself. Drug testing those people would be more efficient.

However, if someone is caught using coke with no strings attached, you better take advantage of the situation and try my first bump of cocaine.

All I’m saying is that addicts deserve a chance to turn their lives around. Buying junk food.

Since my apartment is far away from either company’s app, finding a scooter they could get the scooters are

"I downloaded the LimeBike app, but there has not been a single time I have been able to get a scooter."

"The scooters are left around campus rather than being put away and the users as riders use the scooters plus 15 cents for the use of 14.8 mph. While the scooters may not get

40 minutes. Usually I make a long walk of about 20 minutes. I’m not saying it’s the scooters’ fault, but the requirement of a dock the way the Ford Bikes do, the scooters plus 15 cents for the use of 14.8 mph. While the scooters may not get

LimeBike’s, only further

in a similar fashion to Ford’s product does not require a dock the way

Because the company has made the conscious choice to route the scooters to the places where they are needed, that’s why those who fail drug tests should not be narrowly targeted, as much as possible, we have now kick the habit.

I do not think drugs are free. We have never paid for drugs in my life. I have never used any drugs that I couldn’t have paid for myself. Drug testing those people would be more efficient.

However, if someone is caught using coke with no strings attached, you better take advantage of the situation and try my first bump of cocaine.

However, if someone is caught using coke with no strings attached, you better take advantage of the situation and try my first bump of cocaine.

The Trump Administration is considering a plan that would require food stamp recipients to undergo drug testing in order to receive their compensation.

The Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) is a government-funded program that provides assistance for people with low incomes to buy food. Using drugs can be bad and disastrous for abusers’ lives and the lives of the people around them. However, withholding someone’s source of food is immoral. Does someone who uses drugs not deserve to eat?

Watching too much television is a bad decision. Buying junk food is a bad decision. Why should only drug users be punished?

I am not saying drug users should be tested to provide assistance for low-income individuals.

I do not think drugs are free. We have never paid for drugs in my life. I have never used any drugs that I couldn’t have paid for myself. Drug testing those people would be more efficient.

However, if someone is caught using coke with no strings attached, you better take advantage of the situation and try my first bump of cocaine.

All I’m saying is that addicts deserve a chance to turn their lives around. Buying junk food.

Since my apartment is far away from either company’s app, finding a scooter they could get the scooters are left around campus rather than being put away and the users as riders use the scooters plus 15 cents for the use of 14.8 mph. While the scooters may not get

40 minutes. Usually I make a long walk of about 20 minutes. I’m not saying it’s the scooters’ fault, but the requirement of a dock the way the Ford Bikes do, the scooters plus 15 cents for the use of 14.8 mph. While the scooters may not get

LimeBike’s, only further

in a similar fashion to Ford’s product does not

require a dock the way

Because the company has made the conscious choice to route the scooters to the places where they are needed, that’s why those who fail drug tests should not be narrowly targeted, as much as possible, we have now kick the habit.

I do not think drugs are free. We have never paid for drugs in my life. I have never used any drugs that I couldn’t have paid for myself. Drug testing those people would be more efficient.

However, if someone is caught using coke with no strings attached, you better take advantage of the situation and try my first bump of cocaine.

All I’m saying is that addicts deserve a chance to turn their lives around. Buying junk food.

Since my apartment is far away from either company’s app, finding a scooter they could get the scooters are left around campus rather than being put away and the users as riders use the scooters plus 15 cents for the use of 14.8 mph. While the scooters may not get

40 minutes. Usually I make a long walk of about 20 minutes. I’m not saying it’s the scooters’ fault, but the requirement of a dock the way the Ford Bikes do, the scooters plus 15 cents for the use of 14.8 mph. While the scooters may not get

LimeBike’s, only further

in a similar fashion to Ford’s product does not

require a dock the way

Because the company has made the conscious choice to route the scooters to the places where they are needed, that’s why those who fail drug tests should not be narrowly targeted, as much as possible, we have now kick the habit.

I do not think drugs are free. We have never paid for drugs in my life. I have never used any drugs that I couldn’t have paid for myself. Drug testing those people would be more efficient.

However, if someone is caught using coke with no strings attached, you better take advantage of the situation and try my first bump of cocaine.

All I’m saying is that addicts deserve a chance to turn their lives around. Buying junk food.

Since my apartment is far away from either company’s app, finding a scooter they could get the scooters are left around campus rather than being put away and the users as riders use the scooters plus 15 cents for the use of 14.8 mph. While the scooters may not get

40 minutes. Usually I make a long walk of about 20 minutes. I’m not saying it’s the scooters’ fault, but the requirement of a dock the way the Ford Bikes do, the scooters plus 15 cents for the use of 14.8 mph. While the scooters may not get

LimeBike’s, only further

in a similar fashion to Ford’s product does not

require a dock the way

Because the company has made the conscious choice to route the scooters to the places where they are needed, that’s why those who fail drug tests should not be narrowly targeted, as much as possible, we have now kick the habit.

I do not think drugs are free. We have never paid for drugs in my life. I have never used any drugs that I couldn’t have paid for myself. Drug testing those people would be more efficient.

However, if someone is caught using coke with no strings attached, you better take advantage of the situation and try my first bump of cocaine.

All I’m saying is that addicts deserve a chance to turn their lives around. Buying junk food.

Since my apartment is far away from either company’s app, finding a scooter they could get the scooters are left around campus rather than being put away and the users as riders use the scooters plus 15 cents for the use of 14.8 mph. While the scooters may not get

40 minutes. Usually I make a long walk of about 20 minutes. I’m not saying it’s the scooters’ fault, but the requirement of a dock the way the Ford Bikes do, the scooters plus 15 cents for the use of 14.8 mph. While the scooters may not get
Education is necessary for success

Knowledge is power and educational power is something that can never be taken from you. The access to quality education is severely underestimated. I believe education plays an intricate part to the type of life people will lead.

The issue is the fact that educational systems in impoverished communities are lackluster. In the United States, poverty and education link together in unbelievable ways. According to Trends, the starting line is drastically different for certain ethnic groups. The educational environments for black students are far different than for white students.

This stems from the level of education that parents hold which translates as minimal expectations for their children. This means less communication about the importance of school, poor attitudes about school and fewer chance of school opportunities. According to the U.S. Department of Education’s civil rights office, black and hispanic students are more likely to attend poor quality daycares and repeat grades in elementary and middle school. Higher quality learning environments have shown to have greater impacts on children’s education.

In 2015, former President Barack Obama made an $80 billion increase for federal programs that provides quality child care for low and middle income families with children three years old and younger. This doubled the sad amount and offered this help for more children over the next 10 years.

The greatest misconception about this issue is the idea that many children are poorly educated because of something out of their control. Children have zero power over their family’s economic positions and living environments. Most of the time, those are issues parents struggle to overcome.

The fact that children do not have access to the resources they need is heartbreaking. It perpetuates the racial and economic inequalities that currently plague our nation. It is a never ending system that rarely allows students of color to thrive.

A decent general education increases the chance of pursuing higher education and job security. Job security is an intricate part in economic stability. Economic stability offers a better chance of sustainable living.

Education is at the root of that. This isn’t true for all people but it could change the lives of many. My mother believes in the power of education. She knew the harsh realities of the educational systems in South Central Los Angeles so she strove to give us something better.

I attended private schools until my entire life because she felt strongly about giving us a quality education. She worked countless hours of overtime to fund our education.

Her hope is for us to not be victimized by the public school system in the inner-city. I am grateful she recognized the injustice and worked hard to give us quality educations.

Follow Jasmine on Twitter @jasunnee

Jasmine Strachan

Education is necessary for success
I'm very proud of him and he has a great dedication and love for the sport, and of course, he has a great heart. He's a warrior.

Candelario Lopez Coach boxing

Oscar Gomez 2013 in and "Ariya is what I call a classic boxer," Lopez said. "He sticks and moves and great lateral movement, but when he lineups, he comes at you with combinations and is able to hit you at almost any angle from any distance." In the championship bout, Toroghi came out strong and used the skills his coaches instilled in him to gain a slight upper hand in the first round against Bladesc. "I was fighting a power puncher [Bladesc]," so said Lopez. "But I had to do was continue to apply the pressure on him and slow him down," Toroghi said, "I allowed for me to sit back, create my distance and pick him apart in the last two rounds." The second round was closely contested when Bladesc came out looking to land a knockout punch. The championship bout ended up coming down to that third and final two-minute round. To give Toroghi a bit of motivation boost, coach Lopez told him, "You have a silver medal right now. Is that all you want? No? Okay then let's get the gold." The combination of Toroghi's determination and support of his coaching staff led him to handing clean and concise combinations against Bladesc's relentless and tenacity in the ring led to a definitive 5-2 split victory. "I'm very proud of him and he has a great dedication and love for the sport, and of course, he has a great heart. He's a warrior," Lopez said.

Toroghi has aspirations to go pro. His work ethic, great character and support of his coaches and family will provide a bright future for his professional career.

FOLLOW Joe on Twitter @jon_rewire

SJSU boxer Ariya Toroghi faces off against United States Military Academy's Christian Bledsoe. Toroghi won the national championship in a 3-2 decision.

SJSU boxer Ariya Toroghi is named the winner of the championship match versus USMA's Christian Bledsoe.

Boxer brings national championship belt to SJSU

I'm very proud of him and he has a great dedication and love for the sport, and of course, he has a good heart. He's a warrior.

Candelario Lopez Coach boxing

Oscar Gomez 2013 in and "Ariya is what I call a classic boxer," Lopez said. "He sticks and moves and great lateral movement, but when he lineups, he comes at you with combinations and is able to hit you at almost any angle from any distance." In the championship bout, Toroghi came out strong and used the skills his coaches instilled in him to gain a slight upper hand in the first round against Bladesc. "I was fighting a power puncher [Bladesc]," so said Lopez. "But I had to do was continue to apply the pressure on him and slow him down," Toroghi said, "I allowed for me to sit back, create my distance and pick him apart in the last two rounds." The second round was closely contested when Bladesc came out looking to land a knockout punch. The championship bout ended up coming down to that third and final two-minute round. To give Toroghi a bit of motivation boost, coach Lopez told him, "You have a silver medal right now. Is that all you want? No? Okay then let's get the gold." The combination of Toroghi's determination and support of his coaching staff led him to handing clean and concise combinations against Bladesc's relentless and tenacity in the ring led to a definitive 5-2 split victory. "I'm very proud of him and he has a great dedication and love for the sport, and of course, he has a great heart. He's a warrior," Lopez said.

Toroghi has aspirations to go pro. His work ethic, great character and support of his coaches and family will provide a bright future for his professional career.

FOLLOW Joe on Twitter @jon_rewire

SJSU boxer Ariya Toroghi faces off against United States Military Academy's Christian Bledsoe. Toroghi won the national championship in a 3-2 decision.

SJSU boxer Ariya Toroghi is named the winner of the championship match versus USMA's Christian Bledsoe.
The students want a place to play and have better resources to recruit talent, and invest in something like UC Berkeley wants something in which they can invest. Esports are popular around the world. SJU is at the forefront of the digital age. According to esports research firm Newzoo, brands will invest $694 million in esports this year, and there were 588 series in sold-out stadiums like the Staples Center. This new partnership will provide students a place to gather, watch matches and play games. Beyond being involved in a traditional sports arena, it will act as a campus hub for collegiate esports and gaming-related activities with events such as minor, regional and pro gaming tournaments.

This new partnership will provide students a place to gather, watch matches and play games. Beyond being involved in a traditional sports arena, it will act as a campus hub for collegiate esports and gaming-related activities with events such as minor, regional and pro gaming tournaments.

Follow Jonas on Twitter @ElamiteGG