Teach-In on possible war draws large turnout

By Justine DaCosta
Daily Staff Writer

War and its potential role in the U.S./Iraqi conflict was discussed and analyzed by students, faculty, staff and community members Thursday, at an event that drew more than 1,000 people.

"Teach-In: War with Iraq?" held in Morris Dailey Auditorium, featured speakers whose political views ranged from pro-war to anti-government. Speakers presented concepts and information pertaining to the history of war, potential political and economic motives for a U.S. attack on Iraq and possible repercussions of war.

Stephen Zunes, a professor of Middle East studies at the University of San Francisco, discussed U.S. foreign policies regarding Iraq and said the U.S. government is misleading its citizens by providing false information. Zunes said the U.S. government is waging the war against Iraq based on the claim that Iraq has nuclear weapons, when there is no evidence to support such a claim.

"Weapons of mass destruction is not the reason, it's an excuse," he said.

Zunes discussed the history of terrorism in Iraq and said secular terrorist groups that emerge from the nation are not affiliated with the Iraqi government. He also said that there is no link between Saddam Hussein and al-Qaida, something the U.S. government claims, he said, as a means to gather national support for an attack.

"I never bought the idea that we should launch the first attack because it's suicide," he said. "The one thing I trust about Saddam Hussein is his desire for power."

The "just war theory," which has been historically used by nations as criteria used in judging the necessity of war, was discussed by philosophy professor Rita Manning.

Manning explained the criteria, among them the declaration of war as a fight to regress a wrong.

"We're not fighting to regress a wrong in the past," she said. "We're fighting wrongs in the future. If we set that as a standard we will be opening the gates of hell."

Manning said the United States has not exhausted all other options, which is another criterion for a just war, and that a war could endanger innocent lives.

"We'll be targeting civilians," she said. "This is a line in the sand we should not, can not and will not cross."

Audience members were given the chance to speak, and some felt that

UNIVERSITY OF NEVADA - RENO 52, SAN JOSE STATE UNIVERSITY 24

Spartans record first WAC loss

*Dismal second half leads to Wolf Pack
blowout*

By Chris Giovannetti
Daily Sports Editor

RENO, Nev. — Thanks to a breakout performance by Matt Milton, the gap between the San Jose State University football team and its goal of winning a Western Athletic Conference title has been widened.

The University of Nevada-Reno's freshman running back gained 224 rushing yards and scored twice to give the Wolf Pack a 52-24 victory over SJSU on Saturday at Mackay Stadium.

Of his 19 carries, one rush in particular helped put the Spartans in a position of having to defeat conference leader Boise State University on Saturday to keep pace in the WAC.

With seven minutes remaining in the game, the Spartans trailed the Wolf Pack 31-24. On fourth down and four yards to go on the Spartans 31-yard line, Milton took a handoff from quarterback Zack Threadgill down the left sideline and into the end zone for a touchdown.

The Spartans never recovered and thanks to two interceptions thrown by Spartan quarterback Scott Rislov in the closing minutes of the game, Nevada tacked on two consecutive touchdowns.

The Wolf Pack's victory gives Boise State University the outright Western Athletic Conference lead. Had the Spartans won, it would have set up a matchup of 3-0 WAC teams on Saturday at Spartan Stadium.

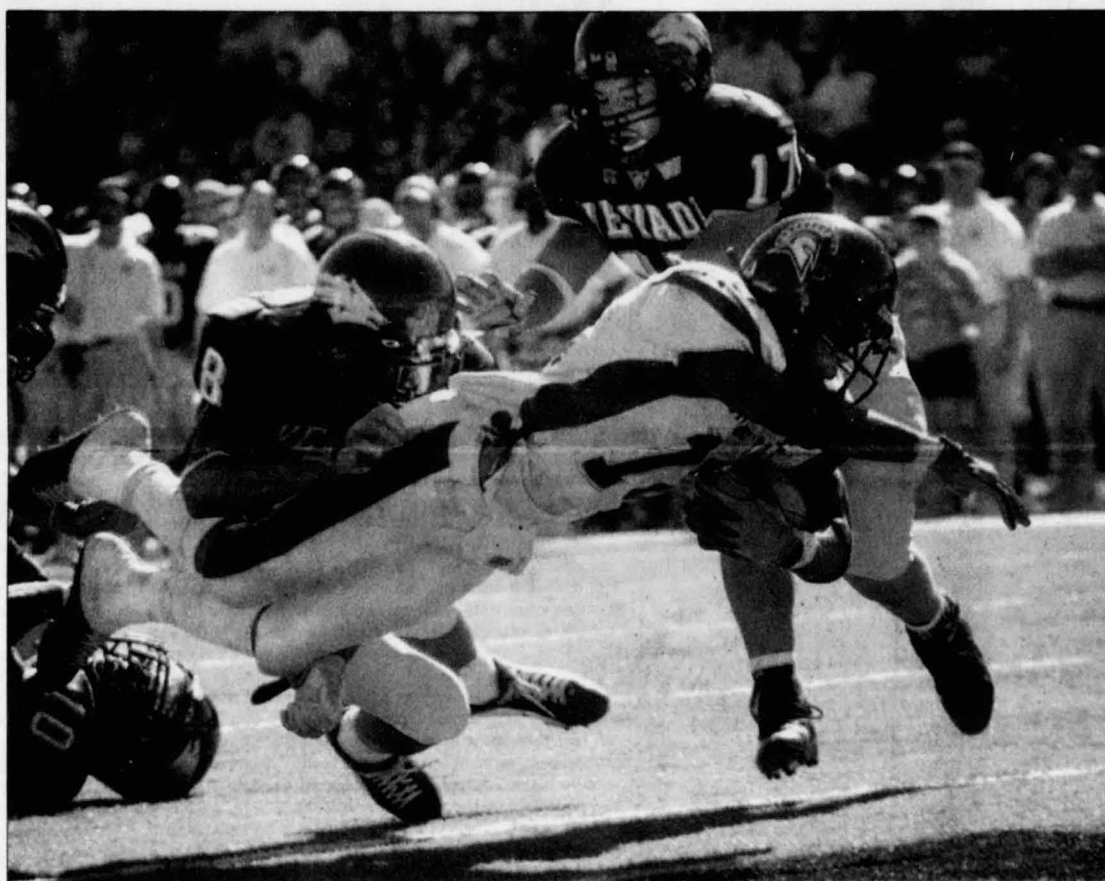

As it is now, SJSU (2-1 WAC, 4-4 overall) will have to play catch-up to the Broncos.

"It's a sign of inexperience on our defense," SJSU head coach Fitz Hill said of Milton's game-sealing run. "I'm disappointed. Reno isn't much better than we are. (The team) should be disappointed too."

Just as fast as SJSU played itself into contention against the Wolf Pack, the Spartans played themselves right out of the game.

The Wolf Pack jumped out to 7-0 lead nine minutes into the game as quarterback Zack Threadgill hooked up with wide receiver Maurice Mann on a 36-yard touchdown pass.

A 22-yard field goal by Spartan kicker Nick Gilliam to open the second quarter cut the Nevada lead to 7-3.

ABOVE: San Jose State University wide receiver Charles Pauley dives five yards into the University of Nevada - Reno, end zone during the second quarter at Mackay Stadium in Reno, Nev. The Spartans were not able to stop the 38 points scored during the second half by the Wolf Pack.

Eight minutes later, Spartan line-backer Mike Liranzo attempted to field Derek Jones' punt. The ball brushed Liranzo, and, squirting past him, was recovered by Nevada's Jorge Cordova at the Spartans 7-yard line.

Three plays later, Wolf Pack running back B.J. Mitchell plunged into the middle on a three-yard touchdown run.

The Spartans bounced right back on a 5-yard touchdown run by wide receiver Charles Pauley. A 22-yard touchdown reception to Tuati Wooden from Scott Rislov moments later gave SJSU a 17-14 halftime advantage.

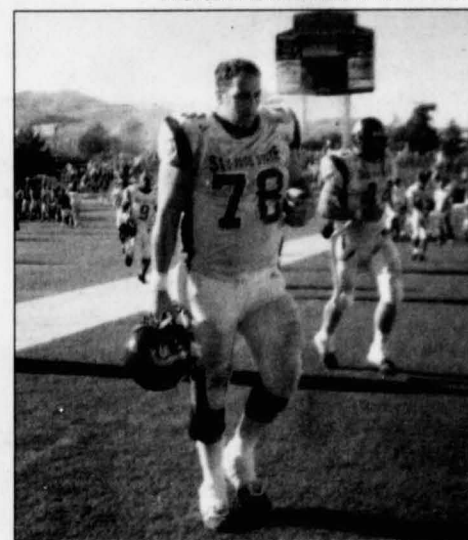

Hill, thinking he could conquer the Wolf Pack in the second half, switched to a more ground-oriented attack. The switch never took hold as runners such as Lamar Ferguson, who had 91 first half rushing yards, gained just one more in the second half against a tightened Nevada defense.

The only notable second half offensive presence for the Spartans was tailback Lance Martin, who rushed

SJSU: From normal school to univeristy

Oct. 20, 1870 was when the cornerstone for San Jose State University was laid at Washington Square. This week we look back at SJSU. Focusing on its history and its role in the community, the Spartan Daily will publish one story each day this week commemorating SJSU's birthday.

By Bryn Graziano
Daily Staff Writer

The first student body class at the school that would become San Jose State University was a group of five women and one man, all with the same goal in mind — to become teachers.

The Minn's Evening Normal School, later to become SJSU, opened its doors to students in San Francisco in 1857, and 13 years later broke ground to build a new campus on Washington Square in San Jose, said Annette Nellen, an accounting and finance professor who also maintains the extensive history on the SJSU Web site.

The sole purpose of the school was to train teachers, Nellen said, and sessions were held every Monday evening with a requirement for all of the city's teachers to attend.

Steve Groth, the SJSU special collections coordinator, said the school got its name quite simply.

"The school taught norms, standards and teaching guidelines to its students," he said.

Groth also said the graduating classes in the early years were so small, that up until at least the 1930s, the school kept placement records of graduates and what they were doing later in life.

"They published the names and addresses of the pupils in a book," he said. "The school was a simple operation, and could also list the whole faculty on a single page."

Today, according to the Admissions and Records Office, there are more than 1,600 faculty members at SJSU.

Admission to the teacher's school was an uncomplicated matter, but the level of student commitment was high, according to one of four books on the history of SJSU, The Story of An Inspiring Past, written by Estelle

IBM recruiters to visit campus, share resources

By Kristina Mendoza
Daily Staff Writer

IBM representatives are slated to host University Day on campus Tuesday in the Student Union.

According to organizers, IBM has held University Days on campuses across the United States, Canada, Germany, India and China for thousands of students since September 2001. So far, more than 6,000 students have taken part in the program that offers students resources normally reserved for IBM partners and developers.

Gina Poole, vice president of developer marketing and web communities said IBM was interested in the University Day program in hopes of showing future architects of the IT world exactly how IBM middleware can open opportunities for e-business.

"Our strategy is to demonstrate open systems versus closed, proprietary systems which can limit the channels for communication and development."

Karen Lee, manager/developer for community outreach with IBM, said the company is an active recruiter at San Jose State University.

"In addition to recruiting, they decided to have a showcase to bring more to the students," Lee said.

Organizers added that IBM is set to showcase its comprehensive resources for open, standard-based technology including XML, Linux, web services, wireless Internet service and also IBM's WebSphere, Lotus, DB2, eServer and Trivoli.

Variety of events slated for homecoming week

By Anne Ward
Daily Staff Writer

Activities abound for this homecoming week.

Events range from the "Kickoff BBQ" on Monday to Saturday's parade and homecoming football game against Boise State University.

In between, a myriad of events are available for San Jose State University students, alumni, faculty members and staff to whet an autumn appetite.

The "Kickoff" Homecoming Carnival will be Thursday, from 5 p.m. to 8:45 p.m. in the Student Union.

A donation of $25 is being requested to help replenish the SJSU Student Emergency Fund which Lyabode Denise Manley, support coordinator for the Student Life Center, said is nearly depleted. In exchange, donors will receive an evening of live entertainment by LeRoy Bennett, an SJSU staff member and Pride of the Pacific, a Hawaiian club that will perform hula dancing.

Manley said two couples, Gorett Rosa and German Serrano, and Bob and Kim Clark, will perform ballroom dancing. The couples are members of a SJSU social dance group and will offer dance lessons after their performance.

The carnival will also offer a live auction featuring several items. Among those are a digital camera, two pairs of three-month passes to the Sport Club and Aquatic Center and two tickets to a concert featuring Latin singers, Rocio Durcal and Marco Antonio Folis.

A "balloon deal table" will display various gifts that can be bought by purchasing a balloon for either $5 or $10. The value of each gift will be double or triple the value paid for the balloon.

Once the balloon is purchased, it is popped to reveal the gift ticket inside. Gift items include certificates to Blockbuster, Waldenbooks, Spartan Bookstore and Old Navy. Other items are gift baskets from Bath and Body Works and two autographed footballs and a football jersey. Manley said she did not know who would be autographing the footballs.

Other scheduled homecoming week events: Monday: Rock the Vote Concert from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Student Union; Greek Week Kickoff Rally, from 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. at the Student Union; Tug O' War from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. on Hoover Lawn.

Tuesday: Barbecue/Greek Olympics from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the 7th Street Plaza; Nooners Concert featuring Moodfrye from noon to 1 p.m. and an encore performance from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m. at the 7th Street Plaza; Volleyball Challenge from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. on Hoover Lawn.

Wednesday: Nooners Concert featuring The Nina Storey Band from noon to 1 p.m. in the Student Union Amphitheater; Bowling from 9 p.m. to 11 p.m. in the Bowling Center.

Religion is not a vital part to living full life

I'm going to hell, who's coming with me?
I drink, I want things other people have and I'm not completely sold on the "afterlife" theory.
Yep, I am a bad person. I am destined for hell. Please save me.
Last week, I was headed into the Department of Motor Vehicles and outside the building, there were two people sitting behind a table full of religious materials.
These people got me thinking — is religion necessary?
Is that what is missing in my life?
For the longest time, I have debated the issue.
Am I ready to live my life the way someone else wants me to?
Am I ready to believe that there is a single higher being who controls the universe?
Am I ready to drop everything I enjoy so that I can have a better chance of getting in to heaven?
My answer to all the above questions are: No.
I am not ready to change my life and leave it in the hands of something or someone I have never seen or felt.
That being said, I do not feel compelled to pick a religion and defend it to the death.
To me, religion seems to be a crock, a sham and yet another way for people to be at peace with themselves.
Think about it, who controls your daily life?

It's you.
You put yourself into certain situations.
You decide what it is that you are going to do today.
You are the one who decides when to do things and when not to.
All this talk about how God makes things happen and he or she will be waiting for you at the pearly gates of heaven if you've lived your life a certain way seems odd.
Who says there is even a heaven?
For that matter who says there is even a hell?
On that note, is there even an afterlife?
At this point, you probably have a few theories of your own.
But here's the thing: Can you prove it?
That's kind of what brought the enlightenment on.
People for the longest time believed that things were happening solely because a god made them happen.
Instead of accepting the theory, some people began questioning the thoughts and in the end they figured why things happened.
The reason why the sun comes up every morning.

The reason why things fall to the ground.
The reason why people reproduce.
All have been proven through science, not because a god made them happen.
This makes me question the higher power theory even more.
I think religion and "gods" give people a reason for living.
It gives people direction.
And for some, it gives people a reason for things happening.
But what proof does anyone really have that his or her "god" truly exists?
And that afterlife everyone talks about — is it really all it is cracked up to be?
Of course that last question is assuming that an afterlife actually exists.
If you're thinking proof lies in a religious book such as the Bible, who's to say that it isn't fictional?
This is the exact reason why I am not sure what to think when it comes to actually believing these stories.
Why am I going to spend time changing my way of life to live the way a character did in a story?
A few weeks ago, I wrote a column about gays.
Since its publication, I've heard many arguments saying that God doesn't believe in gays and the Bible is completely against homosexuality and if you are in fact into the same sex, then you will not do well in the afterlife.

OK, I'll take that argument, but then I'll ask you this: If God created humans, as the same people like to preach, then why are there things that "God" dislikes?
Why isn't this place a perfect place where everyone loves each other?
For me, the answer is simple: a single god does not exist.
The concept of a god or gods is actually a metaphor for self-confidence and your conscience.
By believing in what you are doing, you can enhance your mental state. The same can be said if you believe in something that you think can help you.
In order to live a full life, one does not necessarily need religion, instead all one needs to do is search within himself and find that thing that makes him tick.
And now that I am questioning religion, I am destined for hell. Or am I?
If I am, don't worry, I'll save myself.

Letter | Response to Thursday letter

This letter is in response to the letter from J. Martin Nysted (Thurs., Oct. 17) about the Postal Service sponsoring a football game. His letter is so bad I can't believe you ran it.
Mr. Nysted is completely wrong in everything he says. The U.S. Postal Service operates on its own. They do not receive any tax dollars. Rather than complain about a football game, Mr. Nysted might ask why the post office has been sponsoring a bicycling team for many years (they ride EVERY YEAR in the Tour de France, they're the ones with the shirts that say U.S. Postal Service). The truth is the Postal Service operates just like a private company. They have to turn a profit just like everyone else. That is why they sponsor sporting events.
I am also upset at Mr. Nysted's tone. He is very condescending. Even if he had a valid point, I would still find it hard to agree with him, solely because his tone makes me turn against everything he says.

If someone has a valid point to make, they don't need to invoke Hitler's name. That refuge is reserved for people who can't defend their points with rational arguments. I don't want to come down so hard on Mr. Nysted, but if he is going to be published in my school newspaper, he will have to make factual arguments in a manner befitting an alumnus of my school.
Finally, I have to say that I find it very amusing that the "media" that Mr. Nysted is complaining about is the same one that he is using to publish his argument.

Santa Clara editor needs to check his facts first

So I'm sitting at my desk last Wednesday, dealing with the sort of everyday stress that comes with running the news portion of a daily college paper, when a mood of disgust falls over my co-workers.
"Take a look at this," our esteemed opinion editor said as he slid a sheet of paper across my desk.
What he handed me was a hypocrisy-laced rant printed off the Web site of Santa Clara University's weekly paper, full of the typical jargon that comes from the silver-spoon fed mouths of many private university students who feel the need to boost their self-esteem by bad-mouthing public universities.
Honestly, if I cared any less about what this spoiled brat thinks of me or anyone else at San Jose State University, I'd be dead, but I just couldn't pass the opportunity to throw his ignorance back in his face.
Apparently, Mr. Big Timin' Bronco and his staff have been monitoring the Spartan Daily's Web site, and caught wind of our coverage of the new athletic rivalry that has been set up between our two schools.
I guess when you have an entire week to put out your paper, you have time surf other paper's Web sites in search of column material. Had one of our photographers not somehow come across it, I would have likely been too busy to ever hear about this guy's rant.
Without citing specific examples, he declared that the rivalry had "sparked an unprecedented interest from the Spartan Daily to degrade Santa Clara in a courageous display of immaturity."
I hardly call one article, an opposing views piece and some student comments "unprecedented interest," unless it's a comparison to the overall interest the rest of the Silicon Valley tends to have in SCU — in which case he could be right on the mark.
He went on to compare SJSU to a community college because, he said, anyone can go here. And apparently, people go to Santa Clara in search of a Jesuit school in an ideal atmosphere with an outstanding academic reputation, while over here, the classrooms are overfilled with people who came here just because they "ran out of options."
My fellow "journalist" might be so right, if he wasn't already completely wrong.
While I won't argue the outstanding reputation of Santa Clara University, I'll gladly argue for that of SJSU.
Do these comments apply to the many founders, presidents, chief executive and financial officers and so on of many prominent companies and corporations such as Cisco Systems, Hewlett-Packard, Allstate, PeopleSoft, Novell, Levi Strauss International, Old Navy, Yahoo! and Oracle who went to SJSU?
The racket got even better when my Bronco counterpart brought up the subject of athletics, when he said that Santa Clara "owns the advantage" in that matter.

Obviously this aspiring writer has no future at Sports Illustrated, the publication that recently ranked all the collegiate sports programs in the nation and had SJSU nine spots ahead of SCU.
Earth to smart ass: we might not claim an incredibly prestigious athletic program here, but when your school can boast two alums who have been Super Bowl champion coaches, then you can talk.
All bragging rights aside, let's look at the real issue here. Most people who attend SJSU don't have the option of enrolling at places with higher tuition, and we're not interested in spending the next 30 years of our lives paying off the student loans necessary to afford the outrageous tuition prices at a place like Santa Clara.
For some people, like rich boy over there, that type of situation is one to scoff at. They take for granted that Mommy and Daddy have given them the gift of a pricey college education, without considering the fact that most people who can afford to send their kids to such an institution likely worked their way up the economic ladder with the backing of an education from places just like SJSU.
Instead of thrusting our noses in the air, we are taking pride in what we accomplish at SJSU.
Personally, I have worked my way through college, with the only financial help I've received coming in the form of scholarships I have earned based on my accomplishments as a student journalist.
I could boast the fact that I have worked full time while attending school full time for the last several years, and never dropped or failed a single class, but on our campus, that isn't bragging rights — it's commonplace.
Even our president at SJSU, Robert Caret, who, by the way doesn't go by the title "Father," worked his way through school and the ranks of administration to get where he is.
The end result is students leaving SJSU with something that can't be defined by any class or major. It's called character, something that apparently this Santa Clara student hasn't picked up on in his time there.
So I encourage you, Mr. Big Timin' Bronco, to think twice before you pass ignorance off as journalism. If you need some advice, perhaps you can seek it from David Yarnold, the executive editor of the San Jose Mercury News, also an SJSU alum and former editor on the Spartan Daily.
Until then, I hope you sleep well at night knowing your $30,000 or so in tuition has enabled you to run a weekly paper, while over here, our $1,000 a semester is teaching us to run a daily paper.

war would be an unnecessary move. David Escalante, an anthropology and behavioral sciences major, said the United States doesn't put into practice the principles of equality and freedom that it expects other nations to embrace.

"We've failed to live up to these ideals in our own country, so it's not surprising we don't live up to these ideals in the way we act with people around the world," Escalante said. "We feel empowered to decide who can live and who can die."

Another audience member said the United States is provoking Iraq in an attempt to obtain land.

"We are standing on stolen land as we speak," he said. "We live in the belly of the beast. It is a true patriot that stands up against his government. It's a sheep that blindly follows."

Some speakers, such as anthropology professor Roberto Gonzalez whose speech was titled "Oil and War," examined the U.S. government's interest in Iraq.

Gonzalez said Iraq has the second largest oil supply in the world and the United States uses more of the resource than any other nation.

"Oil is the lifeblood of the industrialized world," he said.

He also said the president and his closest advisers have ties to the oil industry, yet they don't mention oil as a motive in an invasion of Iraq.

The area referred to as the Middle East has a long history of strong government control and was also home to the beginning of modern civilization, said Middle East professor Mira Zussman.

Zussman said the history of Iraq is rooted in Mesopotamia, not Islam or Arabism.

Mesopotamians had the first highly advanced forms of government and language and were responsible for the foundation of mathematics, she said.

"Historians and political scientists look at ancient Iraq as the blueprint for the establishment of a state or an empire," she said.

Zussman said from Saddam Hussein's point of view, Iraq is the center of civilization.

Akthem Al-Manaseer, chair of civil and environmental engineering departments who said he grew up in Iraq and moved to the United States in 1977, shared his views of Iraqi history and U.S. foreign policy.

He said the Middle East has no democracy and has a history of violence, but that the United States is not acting in self-defense.

Countries in the Middle East have relationships with one another that some people of the United States don't understand, he said.

"They fight and they make up."

Al-Manaseer said he opposes a war with Iraq and thinks it could ruin not only the Iraqi economy, but the U.S. economy as well.

"I'd like to see our government show it can effectively handle our economy before it can effectively handle the economy of Iraq," he said.

The U.S. government's difficulties with Iraq are deep-rooted, and a war may allow for the possibility of a regime change, said history professor Jonathan Roth.

Roth said he is not opposed to war and that wars have been fought for a variety of reasons, many of which were not motivated by idealistic causes.

He said war is not always necessary in a regime change and that the occupation of Iraq will result in large-scale U.S. involvement for many years.

Additional speakers included Clarie Hollenbeck, a nutrition and food science associate professor, who spoke about UN sanctions on the children of Iraq, and Tara Torabji from the Livermore-based Tri-Valley Cares, who spoke about weapons of mass destruction.

English professor John Engell discussed the responsibilities of citizens to actively participate in politics, and members of the Jewish Student Union and Muslim Student Union shared their perspectives on a potential war.

The event, which was divided into an afternoon and an evening program, provided a forum for people to discuss their concerns.

Some attendees said they felt a war was a necessary measure.

"We should let Bush do what we elected him to do," said one audience member.

Another used an analogy where Iraq and the United States were neighbors.

"If your neighbor 10 houses down might possibly be stockpiling guns, wouldn't you want to know?" he said.

Some people showed concern for the impact a war could have on the environment. Others said they felt the U.S. government would be setting a bad example by going to war, like one woman who began crying as she discussed how frightened she was for the future of her children.

Another audience member suggested the president should be impeached and the audience erupted in applause.

Some students in attendance said the event was informative and addressed a variety of issues.

"There were diverse topics and people and they all attacked from different sides," said David Camarillo, a junior sociology major. "The integration was great."

Eduardo Fonseca, a junior behavioral sciences and sociology major, said he would like to see more events like the teach-in.

"It's a good way to get everyone's perspective," he said. "Everyone has the right to express themselves."

American Indian tribal leader jailed for stabbing at rap concert

CHULA VISTA, Calif. (AP) — A Viejas Indian tribe official, along with two alleged accomplices, was jailed without bail Sunday in the stabbing death of a man and stabbing and wounding another man after a concert by rap artist Nelly, police said.

Viejas Tribal Chairman Steven TeSam, 42, and his 26-year-old nephew, Hank Banegas, both of Alpine, were jailed without bail for investigation of murder and attempted murder following the stabbings late Friday outside the Coors Amphitheater in Chula Vista.

TeSam is chairman of the Viejas Band of Kumeyaay Indians, which operates a casino in Alpine, about 30 miles east of downtown San Diego.

Telephone messages left at the office of tribal vice chairman Bobby Barrett were not immediately returned Sunday evening.

An unidentified 16-year-old boy, also arrested in connection with the stabbing, was detained in a juvenile facility, said police Sgt. Gary Guthrie.

Investigators did not immediately determine a motive for the attack, which killed Fataima Tauanuu, 30, and wounded Sean Bowers, 27, both of San Diego.

Police were alerted to the attacks after Tauanuu's friends flagged down officers as they were taking him to a hospital in their own car, Guthrie said.

Tauanuu died of multiple stab wounds in the upper torso.

Meanwhile, friends of Bowers were involved in a traffic accident while they also were driving Bowers to a hospital for treatment of multiple stab wounds in the same attack, Guthrie said.

While Bowers' friends were speaking to police, they recognized the car and alleged assailants involved in the stabbing, Guthrie said.

Bowers underwent surgery and was in good condition Sunday night, said University of California, San Diego Medical Center spokeswoman Nancy Varah.

Students will also have access to information on developerWorks, receive free tools, code and tutorials and be able to meet IBM recruiters.

Kathy Mandelstein, program director for IBM developer relations, is scheduled to open the day as the keynote speaker with an overview of IBM and the industry.

Lee said the day would include various speakers throughout the day, tables for free compact discs and SJSU alumni and IBM employees will be available to talk to students. Also, she said recruiters would be present and students are encouraged to bring their resumes.

At University Day, students will additionally be able to visit areas where they can hear about Linux, web services, good computing and software from alphaWorks. Also, two employees from the Silicon Valley lab of IBM will be in attendance to discuss how IBM is helping run eBay, Lee said.

Lee and Jennifer Clemente, a public relations representative for alphaWorks and developerWorks for IBM, said that they were excited to be coming to SJSU.

"We are looking forward in working closer and helping students learn what IBM has to offer with our open philosophy to computing," Clemente said.

Set to begin at 10 a.m., Lee encouraged students to arrive early for a free T-shirt giveaway to the first 100 people.

The event is open to all students and faculty and will also include refreshments.

It is scheduled to conclude at 4 p.m.

Registration will be available at the doors on Tuesday.

October & November: A Time for Saints
St. Francis -- Halloween -- All Saints' -- The Day of the Dead

Many religious traditions honor and remember wise & holy men and women by calling them saints. The Christians word "saint" is used for anyone who is a baptized member of the church living or dead. When capitalized it designates someone who is recognized by many people as having lived an exemplary life or saintly life.

St. Francis Day: Francis, a young man living in Italy in the 14th century renounced his inheritance and worldly wealth walking out of town to begin a new life to share in the suffering of the poor and oppressed while working for peace and justice. He also loved Creation and was a friend of all animals encouraging vegetarian eating. He is a good example of young people today as we struggle to live in a global community at peace with each other living an ecologically sound life.

St. Luke the Healer and writer of a gospel, is remembered in the middle of the month on the 18th. This is good time to remember the connection between spiritual health and physical health as expressed in the life and teachings of Jesus. Want to learn more about this connection join us on Tuesdays or Wednesdays for discussion, Bible study, meditation & prayer.

The last day of October is Halloween and the beginning of the Celtic new year. Christians know this night as the eve of All the Saints Day. It is the time in Celtic tradition that the division between the living and the dead is the "thinnest." For Christians it is a time for remembering those who have died and reminding ourselves that we are still connected to dead within the great mystery of the Communion of the Saints. This special remembrance is also known as Day of the Dead and is an important holy day in many cultures. Watch for the wandering monk on campus on Halloween!

Second-half woes doom SJSU FOOTBALL | Spartans slip to 4-4

By Dray Miller
Daily Managing Editor

RENO, Nev. — During the Homecoming festivities that preceded Saturday's game at Mackay Stadium, the Wolf Pack's mascot flew onto the field on a motor scooter like a shot out of a cannon, only to end up crashing at midfield.

It may have been the wrong mascot, but it represented the Spartans' performance.

San Jose State University turned in a solid first half Saturday, managing to establish the running game while maintaining a passing threat, and shutting down Nevada's top playmakers. However, in what has become a recurring theme for the Spartans this season, a second-half collapse led to a Wolf Pack blowout and SJSU's first loss in Western Athletic Conference play this season.

Behind the first half efforts of running back Lamar Ferguson, who posted 71 yards on 10 carries, and quarterback Scott Rislov who completed 15 of his first 17 passes for 155 yards, and a defense that held Nevada's potent pass offense to just six completions in the first half, the Spartans took a 17-14 lead into halftime.

Unfortunately for SJSU, the momentum made a drastic switch in the second half.

Nevada quarterback Zack Threadgill jump started the Wolf Pack's offense in the third quarter, completing 12 of 14 passes, twice the number of completions he had in the entire first half.

Threadgill also managed to get wide receiver Nate Burleson, who entered Saturday's game as the nation's leader in receptions but was held to just one catch for six yards in the first half, more actively involved.

Burleson finished the game with eight catches for 111 yards and a touchdown.

Nevada did its most damage on the ground, however.

Freshman running back Matt Milton, who was inserted into the starting role after regular starter Chance Kretschmer was lost for the season because of an injury, turned in the top performance of his young career, smoking the Spartan defense for 224 yards on 19 carries. One hundred seventy of those yards came in the second half.

Head coach Fitz Hill declined to point out any single problem that led to the Spartans' second half woes, and instead cited overall miscues and blown opportunities.

"Defensively, we did not come out strong in the second half," Hill said. "Their guys made plays and ours didn't."

The Wolf Pack had a different story.

After opening the half with an 11-play, 80-yard drive that culminated in a 13-yard touchdown pass from Threadgill to receiver Maurice Mann, Nevada's defense found a way to stifle the Spartan's pass attack, holding Rislov to four completions in the second half, and intercepting him twice, once for a touchdown.

"I think it started out fairly well," Rislov said of the SJSU offense's performance Saturday. "I just wasn't as sharp (in the second half) and things went downhill from there."

The nail in the Spartans' coffin came in the form of a crucial fourth down play in the fourth quarter.

With a score of 31-24 in favor of Nevada and more than seven minutes remaining on the clock, a miscue on a third-and-two play on the part of Threadgill led to him taking a knee and leaving the Wolf Pack in a fourth-and-four situation on the Spartans' 31-yard line.

Instead of sending out the field goal unit, Nevada coach Chris Tormey elected to go for it on fourth down, a move that appeared to catch the Spartans off guard.

The call proved wise for Tormey, as Milton took a handoff and sprinted up the left side of the field untouched for a 31-yard touchdown.

From that play on, it was a Wolf Pack rout.

Players said the outcome was a bigger let down than normal, as they had hoped to take the momentum they had built by starting off undefeated in WAC play into next Saturday's game against Boise State University.

"It would have been big (going into the game against) Boise with two undefeated teams," defensive end Chip Kimmich said. "That's how the WAC is. Any team can beat any team."

Charles Pauley, SJSU's standout receiver/kick return specialist who was recently named to the CNN/Sports Illustrated mid-season All-American team and was a limited threat Saturday because of Nevada's defense and special teams working to keep the ball out of his hands, reflected on the disappointment in not being able to enter next week's game undefeated in WAC play.

"It was supposed to be a party, and now it's just a gathering," he said. "But it still can be a party."

for 53 yards in the second half.

"Our offense wasn't clicking and we weren't taking advantage of what we were doing," Ferguson said. "The Nevada defense stepped up this week."

Nevada limited its options and keyed on its two most productive players this season — Milton and wide receiver Nate Burleson.

Burleson had just one catch in the first half and Milton accumulated just 54 yards.

Not deterred, the duo pounded away on the Spartan defense in the second half.

Burleson routinely sprinted past Spartan defenders on his way to a game-high 111 receiving yards. He showed off his athleticism — a reason Burleson was the national reception leader coming into the game — with 38 seconds remaining in the third quarter.

Burleson vaulted over cornerback Melvin Cook in the left corner of the end zone to catch a 27-yard touchdown pass from Threadgill.

"They used him in key situations and he made the plays for them," Spartan defensive end Chip Kimmich said of Burleson. "Every positive thing they needed they got."

Milton, playing in place of 2001 national rushing leader Chance Kretschmer who is out for the season because of a leg injury suffered on Sept. 14, had 107 of his 224 yards in the second half.

Threadgill was also effective with an array of screen passes, namely to tight end Eric Steelman, who accumulated a majority of his 57 yards on runs after a catch.

Nevada took the lead for good on its first drive of the second half on a 13-yard pass from Threadgill to Mann.

On the ensuing drive, Gilliam missed wide right on a 43-yard field goal attempt.

Three minutes later, Nevada kicker Damon Fine booted a 37-yarder to increase Nevada's lead to 31-17.

Following Burleson's acrobatic catch, SJSU cut the lead to 31-24 on a 2-yard draw touchdown run from fullback Lance Martin.

Five minutes later, Milton shut the door with a run that electrified the crowd of 19,481.

SJSU started its next drive from its own 8-yard line but three plays later on third-and-eight, Rislov threw an errant ball into the hands of free safety Keone Kauo who broke one tackle in racing up the left sideline for a touchdown.

On the next possession, Rislov again tossed an interception, this time a downfield pass to cornerback Dominic Cruz on Nevada's 23-yard line. Milton capped the Nevada's drive with a 71-yard sprint for the touchdown.

"We knew that if we didn't do what we had to do, this could happen. Especially in the WAC," Kimmich, who recorded one-and-a-half tackles in Saturday's game. "It would have been the same thing against Boise State."

Rislov finished 19-for-29 passing with 202 yards and one touchdown. Wooden caught six balls for 88 yards.

Kickoff for Saturday's Homecoming game against Boise State (3-0 WAC, 6-1 overall) is scheduled for 2 p.m.

The Broncos thrashed Fresno State University on Friday, 67-21.

"We came out here really high like we had the game won before we even played," Ferguson said. "We thought we could run right through them. This game was to play for first place next week. (Boise State) came in high to their game and we thought we could do the same."

Angels outslug Giants 11-10

Associated Press

ANAHEIM — San Francisco's biggest night of offense this postseason wasn't enough to send the Giants home with a 2-0 lead in the World Series.

Four homers — including another monstrous shot by Barry Bonds — were wasted in the Giants' 11-10 loss to the Anaheim Angels in Game 2 on Sunday night.

Instead of returning to Pacific Bell Park with a comfortable lead and momentum from a memorable comeback, the Giants will have to regroup.

Rediscovering their offense won't be a problem.

Reggie Sanders, David Bell and Jeff Kent also homered for the Giants, who have gone deep seven times in the first two games.

But despite the impressive display of longball, San Francisco and Anaheim are tied after two games.

The Giants looked like they were out of it after Russ Ortiz was hammered in a five-run first inning. It was most runs scored in the opening inning of a Series game in 23 years — when Baltimore did it against Pittsburgh.

Instead of being content with a split after a 4-3 win in the opener, the Giants rallied right away.

Bonds started it with the first of his three walks to lead off the second. He went to third on J.T. Snow's single and Sanders followed with his second homer in as many games.

When Bell followed with a homer — just the 13th time players have gone back-to-back in World Series history — the Giants were right back in the game and dancing in their dugout.

San Francisco wasn't discouraged by Tim Salmon's two-run homer in the bottom half. The Giants got a run back quickly in the third when Kent led off with his first homer of the postseason.

When San Francisco put together a four-run fifth to take a 9-7 lead it looked like the Giants were in control.

Rich Aurilia started the rally with a double and Bonds was intentionally walked with one out.

Benito Santiago then singled off Ben Weber to load the bases. Snow's two-run single tied it and gave the former Angel four RBIs in the first two games.

With runners on first and third and two outs, Bell hit a grounder up the middle. Second baseman Adam Kennedy made a diving stop and flipped to shortstop David Eckstein for the force.

Snow, running hard on the play, slid in and was ruled safe by umpire Mike Winters. Eckstein threw his arms up in disgust and briefly argued to no avail. Santiago scored the go-ahead run on the play.

Shawon Dunston added an RBI single to make it 9-7.

But the Giants didn't manage another hit until Bonds' two-out homer in the ninth off Troy Percival, which came too late to help.

San Francisco was the latest team to be shut down by Anaheim rookie phenom Francisco Rodriguez, who struck out four in three perfect innings of relief.

Revolution take Cup in overtime

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — League MVP Carlos Ruiz scored in the 23rd minute of overtime Sunday to give the Los Angeles Galaxy their first Major League Soccer title with a 1-0 victory over the New England Revolution.

The Galaxy had lost their three previous visits to the MLS Cup. New England was playing in its first, but it had the advantage of playing in its home stadium in front of a championship game-record crowd of 61,316.

After 112 scoreless minutes, a breakaway ended Revolution goalkeeper Adin Brown's bid for a fifth shutout in seven playoff games. Tyrone Marshall brought the ball downfield with Ruiz on his left and only one defender, Rusty Pierce, to beat. Marshall crossed to Ruiz, who left-footed a shot over Brown's outstretched legs and into the far side of the net.

The game was seven minutes from heading to a shootout.

Ruiz, the league's leading goal-scorer in the regular-season, was selected MVP of the longest title game in league history.

Los Angeles goalie Kevin Hartman was rarely tested.

Two of the Galaxy's three MLS Cup losses were in Foxboro, including the inaugural event in 1996, when D.C. United won 3-2 in overtime; they also lost in '99 and 2001.

Ruiz had several chances to win Sunday's game, including a couple in overtime as the teams belatedly offered a flurry of offense just before the game-winner.

In the 12th minute of OT, he tried a bicycle kick that bounced off Brown's head.

Ruiz took a pass from Peter Vagenas at the penalty spot in the 20th minute of overtime, but Brown dove to his left to get a hand on it and knock it away. New England's Winston Griffiths followed with a deflected shot that went off the crossbar in the 22nd minute. Soon after, Ruiz ended it.

The teams played to a scoreless tie after a half — the first time that's happened in the MLS Cup's seven-year history.

Eos Angeles threatened when Mauricio Cienfuegos crossed to Ruiz in the 17th minute, but he couldn't get the ball before he was stuck behind the left post and had no angle on the goal.

Niners lose nailbiter; Raiders fall to Chargers in OT

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Even without an impromptu autograph session, the San Francisco 49ers guaranteed an interesting ending to Sunday's game against the Saints.

Aaron Brooks scored on a 1-yard run with 1:56 left to seal New Orleans' 35-27 victory, but the Saints drew a penalty for having 12 men on the field. With just one timeout left and not wanting to waste any more time, 49ers coach Steve Mariucci declined the penalty and turned to his high-powered offense.

Capping a sensational fourth quarter in which the offense scored 22 points, the Saints (6-1) let San Francisco get to their 39-yard line before shutting down the 49ers.

The 49ers (4-2) got another touchdown pass from Terrell Owens, but not the kind of big performance expected of him after a week of self-imposed hype. After catching his second touchdown pass in a victory over Seattle last week, Owens pulled a pen from his sock, autographed the ball and presented it to his financial adviser sitting nearby. After some people criticized the stunt, Owens said black players were singled out for expressing themselves, but he later backed off those comments.

On Sunday, Owens was held to just four catches for 61 yards. He did score a touchdown, a 4-yarder, and afterward showed his sense of humor when he lifted his feet to let his teammates to inspect for pens. He then tossed the ball to a 49ers fan, who promptly dropped it.

Jeff Garcia, who matched a career high with four touchdown passes against New Orleans last year, was 23-of-39 for 275 yards and a touchdown.

The 49ers completed 75 percent of their third-down attempts and had 418 total yards in offense. The Saints completed 71 percent of their third-downs and had 422 yards.

Saints running back Deuce McAllister, who leads the NFC in rushing, had 139 yards on 21 carries. Brooks completed 23 of 35 passes for 254 yards and three touchdowns.

The 49ers, who scored on three of their four first-half possessions, used a 12-play opening drive to take a 7-0 lead. The Saints answered with an 11-play scoring drive on their first possession, capped with a 4-yard TD pass to McAllister to tie it at 7.

San Francisco opened the second quarter with a 2-yard touchdown run by Garrison Hearst to retake the lead at 14-7.

OAKLAND — Marty Schottenheimer is coaching a new team, but he still knows how to beat the Oakland Raiders.

LaDainian Tomlinson ran 19 yards for the winning touchdown with 11:22 left in overtime as the San Diego Chargers beat Oakland 27-21 Sunday in a game between the AFC West's top teams.

It was Tomlinson's second TD of the game, and fans threw garbage on him and his teammates as they celebrated the dramatic victory in the end zone.

The Chargers (6-1) have a one-game lead over Denver and a 1-game edge over the Raiders (4-2) in the division. Oakland had won the previous four meetings and eight of nine.

It's the Chargers' best start since 1994, when they went to the Super Bowl and lost to San Francisco.

Oakland's Jon Ritchie scored the tying TD on a 7-yard catch from Rich Gannon with 1:21 left in regulation. It was Ritchie's sixth reception of the season and his first touchdown.

San Diego quarterback Drew Brees ran 1 yard for the go-ahead score with 7:18 left before the Raiders answered with Ritchie's TD.
