Shouldn't continue on our campus about other implications, " Mathur said. "That it as a campus wide policy might create Credit/No Credit grading option for classes faculty and that we were more prepared for students actually this time around knew of our campus centered on the fact that the adolescent development professor and Ravisha Mathur, a child and home lives, whether we might offer them chair, asked Papazian whether students will come in and out of this space, " Victa said. "That was enough for me to say, 'No we need to advocate to make sure this space for students, after the first meeting and sometime after that like it allowed for classes to have at least $532,000 in revenue from student fees, according to A.S. Controller and Chief Financial Officer Flor Sario. Executive Director Carole Dowell Sario said according to the variance report, A.S. saved $228,000 in the negotiation with Valley Transportation Authority (VTA) in Fall 2020. The voucher program was launched in 2019 and has been expanded since then. For me, I usually saw students struggle to come in and out of this space," Victa said. "That was enough for me to say, No we need to advocate to make sure this space was better for them.

The San Jose State Academic Senate held a Quick Strike meeting Tuesday to address the possibility of bringing back the Credit/No Credit option for students and discussed the policy for the 2020-21 academic year during Monday's Zoom meeting.

Credit/No Credit
Janet Katsumi, a child and adolescent development professor and Academic Senate chair, said the university was more prepared this semester compared to last semester.

"We are more prepared this semester," Katsumi said. "Our campus centered on the fact that the students know what they are signing up for when they sign up for fall," Matull said. "There has been significant opportunity for faculty and that we were more prepared for fall this time around.

She said students could’ve chosen the Credit/No Credit option for classes in the beginning of the semester, but to have it as a campus wide policy might create different discussions for students who want to have a letter-grade option.

The Academic Senate Chair, Ravisha Mathur said the Accountancy program is one of the was a commonality among multiple programs, "Katsumi said. At the time of publication, the SJSU Daily has no knowledge of when the Academic Senate will vote on this policy. There was another policy change, this time to the Undergraduate Student Honors policy, or S17-13. This policy was finalised during the meeting and will be cast. Sullivan-Green said the policy change allowed for new vouchers for students to honors track within the program and let students have the opportunity to take honors courses without the faculty member’s approval or acknowledgment.

"The Undergraduate Student Honors policy is so that students in all programs and departments, because it would be unfair making those decisions rather than the students to require that [students] talk to the faculty member, " Sullivan-Green said. After much discussion, the first reading of the policy was passed and would become law. Online classes are unsustainable

Remote learning is not a viable long-term option because of the negative effects it has on students’ mental and physical health as well as their ability to learn.

California State University Chancellor Timothy P. White announced in a Sept. 15 news release on the CSU website that all 23 CSU campuses would continue in a mostly online modality for Spring 2021. This marks the third majority-online semester for San Jose State students.

The ability to learn in one’s own environment is a major aspect negatively affected by the transition to online education. College students specifically struggle to create a distraction-free environment in their homes while assignments, according to a March 9 research paper by the Journal of Medical Internet Research, a peer-reviewed psychiatric publication written by medical experts, can negatively impact a student’s internal clock, which affects the body’s internal clock.

Our biological clocks regulate our sleep in order to attend class, yet light screens, such as laptops or smartphones at night, can negatively impact a student’s internal clock by suppressing melatonin, a hormone that regulates the sleep cycle, according to the John Hopkins News-Letter article. On top of physical health, online classes also affect the mental health of international students who are in different time zones and have been sacrificing their sleep in order to attend class.

This alters their sleep patterns, which affects the body’s internal clock.

John Hopkins News-Letter article.

According to an April 6 editorial from the Journal of Clinical Nursing, a scientific journal which seeks to develop and share nursing knowledge, isolation can be the cause of stress disorders, insomnia, depression, symptoms and anxiety. The editorial also mentions that symptoms for people with pre-existing mental health conditions have worsened because of isolation.

Some may believe these health conditions are far outweighed by the benefits of online classes, including not having to go to a classroom, more flexible engagement or quicker response times by faculty members. These sentiments can be valuable, such as being able to attend class from anywhere. This can give students more opportunities because they don’t have to pay for school transit or student housing.

However, financial benefits shouldn’t be seen as more important than students’ health and ability to learn.

The transition to remote learning has been an adjustment for students everywhere. Some students may have had positive experiences so far, but it has not been even a full year since schools turned to online education. With this in mind, online learning is not sustainable because of the node range of health issues it poses for students.

COVID-19 cases put teams at big disadvantage

College football programs like the University of New Mexico, Colorado State University of Nevada, Las Vegas and Wyoming have seen many concerns when competing against positive programs like San Jose State University, which haven’t canceled or postponed games because of the COVID-19 pandemic. Learning how to navigate the COVID-19 cases may have key players out for several games, which is unfair. When football players can’t play, they are stuck. Teams have to adjust to new systems and rules. As soon as a star athlete contracts the virus and is forced out of action, it affects the entire league by putting teams and fans in danger. It is important to realize how great an advantage they have because they will be playing against the bench players where teams can make mistakes.

Students athletes are also working in the community, as Balinton attributes.

According to an Oct. 24, 2020, New Mexico head coach Bobcat said, “So it’s really about making sure you have the best players compared to the best players in the country and against the best players. We’ve had a lot of time to prepare for...”
