EDITORIAL

Reminder on Proposition 3

Why vote "Yes" on Proposition 3? If you need reminding, Proposition 3 is the $200 million general obligation bond issue to be offered for voter approval on the Nov. 6 general ballot.

It is being sought by the state to pay a portion of the $448 million total estimated as the minimum state building needs for the next five years, necessitated by the huge increase in state population and consequent overcrowding of all the state institutions.

Approval of the bond issue by the voters is essential if the state colleges shall continue to provide for the young men and women of California who seek admittance.

These young people want and deserve a college education. Their parents demand it for them because they know that college education means progress and leadership. Public schools need thousands of teachers and the state colleges are a principal source of supply.

Trained men and women are needed by business, industry and public service.

A favorable vote on Proposition 3 is imperative if the state colleges are to be available to many thousands of young people seeking the educational opportunities they offer.

Can you vote on Nov. 6 with political convictions founded on intelligent forethought?

No doubt a negative reply to the question would not place you in the minority. As election time nears, political promises and campaign claims can create confusion and, possibly, disinterest in the minds of the voter.

The plea to vote is all well and good but voting with political convictions supersedes fulfilling only a right to by marking an X in a square on election day. Elected officials need not be expected to be more intelligent than the intelligent votes that elect them.

Solidifying our political beliefs, then, comes from knowledge and understanding of the political scene. Many groups have set out to become mediums of interpreting political thoughts of a particular group. Two such organizations are the Student Democrats and the Young Republicans. Speakers, panels, forums and inter-group discussions comprise some of the activities of these organizations which are devoted to expounding political thoughts as they interpret them.

We do not espouse any favoritism for any party or candidates but we urge that students vote with convictions founded on intelligent understanding of politics, party platforms and candidate claims. —B.P.

Notes in Hi-Fi

By DON OSBORNE

Used with a certain degree of skill, the guitar can be an extraordinarily versatile instrument. It has been used from interpretations of Bach (Andre Segovia) to a vital part of modern jazz (Barney Kessel). However, few men are able to master this instrument to a point of free interpretation regardless of music interpretation.

This is not the case with Laurindo Almeida, a man whose name is probably most familiar to jazz enthusiasts who remember him as the feature guitar soloist with Stan Kenton during the late '40's and early '50's. Or they may remember his recent album in which he teams up with Bud Shank to produce some rather unusual but cool sounds. The outstanding feature of this album with Shank was the jazz tempo to modern jazz (Barney Kessel). However, few men are able to master this instrument to a point of free interpretation regardless of music interpretation.

Almeida has come forth once again, but this time he has chosen to prove his versatility by virtually ignoring jazz. However, the outcome is an exceptionally exciting one. The album, entitled simply "Laurindo Almeida" includes such selections as Schubert's "Serenade," Lecuona's "Andalucia," Drigo's "Serenade" from the ballet "Les Millions D'Arlequin," Tchaikovsky's waltz from the "Serenade for Strings," "La Paloma" with arrangements by Almeida and Sebastian de Yradier; and Toselli's "Serenade."

On the second side are "Adios," Bizet's "Serenade Espagnole;" and three compositions with the name of "Serenade" by Moszkowski, Sigmund Romberg and Franz Drda. He finishes with "Brazilian Ukelele" by Nazareth.

PLAYS VARIETY
The amazing factor in Almeida's strumming is his ability to play a variety of tunes each with a different origin and each containing a different mood. For instance his performance of "Serenade Espagnole" is excellently done with a fine degree of insight and feeling. However, when he switches over to Sigmund Romberg's "Serenade," though the mood and origin are entirely different, Almeida loses none of this in his interpretation.

In 1947 Kenton invited him to come to the United States and be a guest soloist. By 1950 Metro-nome magazine had acclaimed his talents by stating "He plays with extraordinary beauty of sound and ease of fingering and plucking, with an abundance of good taste rare on any instrument, almost without parallel among guitarists, even such a sanctified performer as Andre Segovia."

ABOUT THOSE FLICKS

By DICK O'CONNOR

Engaging in the greatest waste of movie talent and energy since the pioneer flick, "The Great Train Robbery" a large party of movie technicians climbed the mountains of Switzerland to film something called "The Mountain."

This is probably the only movie in history to be made without a hero. As the celluloid catastrophe winds its way through the hills and almost two hours of viewing time, Spencer Tracy expends enough energy for a baker's dozen heart attacks.

THE STARVING CLIMBERS

The plot of the epic concerns two brothers, mountain climbers since diaper days, who are starving because no one wants to climb mountains anymore. Tracy becomes a sheep herder but young snip brother, Robert Wagner, still yearns for the top of the mountains.

A plane crash on the highest hill in the vicinity brings the sport back to favor but Spencer does not want to climb. Some mystic voice tells him that the great mountain does not want to be climbed.

Old Spence finally consents and the grueling trek begins. Young snip Wagner starts the climb in a big hurry but soon slows down and Spence leads the rest of the way.

One survivor, an Indian princess is rescued by Tracy. Wagner rescues a briefcase full of money, a neck full of cameras and lots of other goodies.

HERO RESCUES HEROINE

Tracy makes it with his princess but the young snip plunges into a snow filled chasm. The sequence must have been filmed by Wagner on the way down. The fall of Wagner was met by wild applause at the performance we attended.

The movie bills Claire Trevor as a co-star and she does appear briefly as an assistant sheep herder.

If you have never seen the Alps the movie is worthwhile. If you like Spencer Tracy, don't remember him in this role. If you don't like Robert Wagner, run and see "The Mountain." Join the cheering throng as he disappears beneath the snow.

Spartans Work on Defense; Rooting Section Increases

Coach Bob Bronzan ran the San Jose State gridders through a long defensive scrimmage yesterday in preparation for next week's important clash with the Stanford Indians at Palo Alto.

According to backfield coach Gene Menges the right side of the SJS forward wall was the weak spot in the Washington State game.

The offense was still ahead of the defense yesterday as reserve back Al Chapman threaded his way through the first team for several long gains.

One bright note in the scrimmage was the continued fine passing and receiving of the Golden Raiders. Hal Boutte, Art Powell and Walt Ackemann all showed well as receivers.

With Stanford's strong aerial game and lack of defense coupled with the same two qualities of San Jose football, the score of the upcoming game may resemble that of a pro basketball game.

San Jose does have one definite advantage. The Spartans have another week to sharpen the defense while Stanford takes on a rugged Ohio State team. On the brighter side, the Spartans gained an additional roster as halfback Jim Riley became a father yesterday.

The new arrival, born at San Jose Hospital at 6:57, is Timothy Patrick Riley. Riley's wife Dana and the new arrival are doing fine.

It is the first child for the couple.

This weekend is the second week of nation-wide football and the SPARTAN DAILY sports staff and guest selector, Danny Hill, athletic news director, stick their necks out trying to tab the winners.

Sports editor Sal Orlando missed only one game last week discounting the COP-Kansas tie. This week the other scribes are out to catch the leader.

The Michigan State-Michigan game rates as the top football attraction across the nation. It is the consensus of the scribes that the Spartans will win, but Michigan shows tremendous power in dumping UCLA last week and can't be counted out.

Ohio State is a solid pick over Stanford. The Indians showed a lack of depth against MSU last weekend in losing 21-7. COP is rated over Cincinnati in a one-sided prediction. USC and Jon Arnett are picked over Wisconsin. SMU over Missouri, Notre Dame over Indiana and Illinois over Washington.

TCU and Jim Swink are picked over Arkansas, but the Razorbacks can't be counted out of the contest with their strong defense. Cal got a 3-2 nod over Pitt, but the Bears will have to hold up in the second half.

'Mural Football Starts Monday

Intramural football action gets underway Monday in all leagues. The leagues are divided into two fraternities, the National and the American Leagues with the independents in the Coast League.

The fraternity games will start at 3:50 p.m. at the Willow Street Park. Both fraternity leagues will play there, but the games must be over by 5 p.m. Milt Stewart, student intramurals head, announced.

Stewart stated that players must not smoke or swear during games, or action will be taken against the team. Independents play at the Rosegardens with all games starting at 4 p.m. Top game scheduled for Monday is the Kappa Alpha Alpha Tau Omega game.

'Scarlet Macaw' Tour Opens Nature Series

"Land of the Scarlet Macaw," first screen tour in a series of five, will open the centennial season of nature exhibitions sponsored by the Santa Clara Valley Audubon Society and San Jose State College, Tuesday night, Oct. 9.

"The Audubon series are designed to show the correct methods of conserving and using our natural resources," commented faculty representative Dr. Arnold G. Applegarth.

Dr. Ernest P. Edwards, author of "Finding Birds in Mexico," will supply the narrative for the initial screen tour Tuesday, in Morris Dailey Auditorium at 8 p.m.

After receiving his Master's degree in ornithology at Cornell University, Dr. Edwards taught biology at Hanover College and was an instructor in bird study at the Audubon Camp in Wisconsin. Dr. Edwards' knowledge of the birds of Mexico and his interest in the problems of conservation in the tropics led to his election to vice-president and member of the board of directors of the Foundation for Neotropical Research.

Following Dr. Edwards' lecture, four more screen tours are scheduled beginning with "Cypress Kingdom," Dec. 11. Others planned are "Animals at Night in Color," Jan. 15, "Between the Tides," Feb. 12 and "Hawaii, U. S. A.," March 13.

Student tickets for the series are available in the biology store-room for $2.

Profits from the screen tours are used to further the Audubon program, added Dr. Applegarth. He also listed tuition scholarships to the West Coast Nature School, contributions toward the Audubon Summer Camp, held at the Sugar Bowl resort near Donner Summit, and establishment of "Bay area bird sanctuaries as other uses of the profits.
