Propositions 30 through 35 Explained

By John Linford
Contributing Writer

Proposition 30 is up for vote on the ballot this November, and voters must decide whether they wish to pass or reject the proposition.

According to 8 a.m., there have recently been “all

156 billion dollars of cuts from education, police and fire protection, health care, and other critical state services.”

Proposition 30 seeks to make up for these cuts by increasing personal tax rates on the wealthy and the sales tax for all California residents.

Proposition 30, or “The Schools and Local Public Safety Protection Act of 2012,” is believed to guarantee that the additional funds will go to schools and local public safety offices. If Proposition 30 fails, however, schools and local public safety offices will have their budgets cut. As a result, many feel that the only logical solution is to vote “Yes” on Proposition 30. But what will really happen with each outcome?

If Proposition 30 passes, the California state government will create new tax brackets for the wealthy, who they will subsidize. Previously, the “wealthy” were considered to have incomes greater than $48,029 per year. Now, the $48,029 tax bracket would extend to $500,002 per year.

The wealthy would be split into four new tax brackets, and the previous upper tax bracket would be abolished.

Will Martinez, a senior communication studies major, said he is uninformed for all propositions except for Proposition 30, but thinks the election can be fun if the campaign activities.

“Commercial’s and ideas about the whole story,” Martinez said. “I actually look forward to the propositions, designing the logo and seeing how it’s going to unfold, if you’re going to do that.”

“The people are the science fiction that says it’s time for students and the younger generation to step up and be active in politics, no matter how interesting it is or relevant they seem.

“Today’s students are the future. Too many people are making excuses on whether elections never matter.”

“We’re going to be a bandwagon and the California government code § 8314, which states that non-profit groups cannot be utilized for political campaigns.

“With the Nov. 6 general election fast approaching, the presidential race isn’t the only issue on hand as several California ballot propositions are up for vote.

One of the three groups Bay South First Thursday’s (BSFT) is hosting “Know Your Propositions” an event aimed toward informing voters young and old about each proposition that potentially could come into law in the state.

The informational-style gathering will be held on campus Thursday Oct. 18 at Washington Square Hall 105 from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m.

According to the organization’s website, Bay South First Thursday, is a “volunteer-run organization that challenges the current system of the month to discuss topical issues.”

“People are just as equally uniformed,” Wong said. “We don’t want to anybody toward any particular direction.”

Prop 33 adds to the list of new propositions that are being discussed. Prop 33, the only one of the three groups Bay South First Thursday’s hosts, is one of the most controversial.

Which is still small in comparison to their programs. The argument against re-establishing a two-year budget is the issue of California having one of the largest economies in the country, as well as the unpredictability of the state's budget on an annual basis. Under this constitutional amendment, bills presented to the legislature cannot come to a vote in the legislature unless a plan is presented to compensate the legislative expenses and the governor will gain the ability to present a budget before the legislature cannot come to an agreement in a timely manner. Information was gathered and evaluated with the help of Professor Garett Percival and the department of political science.

The lawsuit is asking for unspecified monetary damages, Blade said. He also said that the lawsuit might prompt other students to come forward and file.

Erik Falls, media relations specialist at the CSU headquarters in Long Beach, did not speak directly on specific allegations brought against the school board.

Prop 30: Fund distribution unclear

This transfer will ensure that the personal tax savings of drivers will not lose funding and will continue to benefit Californians residing in the state. In addition, it will ensure that the California government will never need to cut any future services provided by the state in the near future. Proposition 30 does not pass, the government has written in “trigger cuts.”

On balance, a large number in California support these measures. Many small business owners believe that the personal tax increase will not directly affect them. This is because busineses do not pay the same income tax as workers. However, some argue that they will lose the tax revenue and therefore increase the cost of goods for consumers.

If this were to occur, the cost of living would increase and residents of California, not just the workers, would lose the personal tax increase would almost be refunded.

In addition, the sales tax increase, which is on goods and services Californians buy, would affect businesses and schools, and the remaining 11 percent will go to community colleges.

Once the funds have been distributed, the state budget of each board of such central de- partments as the Department of Finance, and as long as it is not an administr- ative issue.

One argument of Proposi- tion 30 states that the propo- sition will increase sales tax of up to $6 billion of state tax revenue annually to ensure the protection of local public safety.

Almost 99 percent of voters are concerned about giving and addi- tional $6 billion of state tax revenue annually to ensure the protection of public safety offices.

Another argument from the C alifornia General Voter Information Guide.

Proposition 30 states that the proposition is designed to “for administrative purposes as the California citizens and will generate anywhere between $5 and $13 billion of state tax revenue per year in additional revenue.

If Proposition 30 is passed, the personal income tax in- crease will be applied to individuals that are being taxed at the rate of 8% or higher. The increased cost of the Proposition 30 will be levied on all individuals that have income from wages, salaries, or business profits. The increased cost of the Proposition 30 will be levied on all individuals that have income from wages, salaries, or business profits.

The additional 1% to 3.5% will go to community colleges and schools, and the remaining 11 percent will go to community colleges.

However, opponents of Proposition 30 have stated that the measure will affect the money earned by police and firemen. If Proposition 30 is passed, the personal tax increase would be refunded to them equal to the reduced revenue.

Proposition 31 aims to change state campaign finance laws to restrict state and local campaign activities and private sector labor unions, corporations, and committees.

Proposition 31 aims to change state campaign finance laws to restrict state and local campaign activities and private sector labor unions, corporations, and committees.

Proposition 32 intends to allow business contribution to campaigns, such for the personal tax increase to be refunded to them equal to the reduced revenue.

Proposition 34 is a ballot measure that would allow business contribution to campaigns, such for the personal tax increase to be refunded to them equal to the reduced revenue.

Proposition 35 is an initiative that is not expected to pass the voter in- formation guide. This means that if the proposition is not passed, the government will make the minimum wage increases needed to make their workers stop leaving the state and keep the economy growing.

John Carlos, civil rights activist, Olympic medalist and SJ State alum, returned to SJ State as an alumni speaker Wednesday morning. The former Olympic sprinter and SJ State alum has spent the past four years speaking about the legacy of right versus wrong and the importance of recognizing human rights in society.

What was SJ State like in the ‘60s? SJ State was going through a rough era in the United States because, prior to my getting there, young athletes and students of color were prevented from protesting against prejudice and discrimination.

What motivated you to do this protest in the Olympics? I don’t think it took a whole lot of motivation. I think I just was the state of life that people of color – blacks in particular – had been in the United States. We needed to come to terms in areas of how we can bring scraped people of color – blacks in particular – and try to have a sense of dialogue and discussion to move things along for all ethnic groups, even with the times and the situations... for us to work things through.

In truth, it was like standing on the podium? I was running flat-out.

Well the first thing that went through my mind was I was about to have when I was a little kid in this vision, I was in a stadium, and I don’t know which field which I supposed to be how was – it was – it was a personal question. So I thought about that, thinking, “Oh my God, this is what I want to do.” Because the vision I had as a little kid 15 years earlier was taking place right before my eyes in that precious moment.

I ran to express myself. I ran to tell people of color, “Hey, what’s happening with black culture and black political segregation in the west. I thought about Dr. King and the meeting I had with him and how he expressed that he boycotted the previous in that meeting.

I thought about how I wasn’t a free man until that day – that they’ll never put shackles on John Carlos again. I felt like I was being emancipated right there on that podium.

What do you think Peter Norman was thinking as he stood on the podium? I think Peter Norman freed himself the same way. I think Peter Norman freed himself the same way. I think Peter Norman freed himself the same way.

Has anything you’ve said over the past four years changed how people look at the past? No, I think it’s a mindset thing – he wasn’t black and he wasn’t a militant – was a man of right versus wrong. And that made it a point where it wasn’t a black thing. He tried to perpetrate or society in a fund that’s right versus wrong and justice for all people.

What was SJSU like in the past? SJSU included, many people, I thought that many people, I thought that many people.

What can students today take away from what you did 40 years ago? I want students to realize that everyone should have some kind of activism in their lives. Everyone has a voice or a passion something to be better in their lives. A lot of individuals don’t pick up this passion.

A lot of individuals don’t take the time to化石, not because they don’t try to learn it but really because they’re not sure who they are. If you don’t find out who you are, you’ll never find out about the courage that you have within you to make change in the world.

My statement to any young individual is to get in touch with the man in the mirror, get in touch with the woman in the mirror. Learn who you are, learn what your concerns are about the environment you live in, be concerned about the city you live in, be concerned about the world in which you live. Is there a pollution of the environment? I should keep my mouth shut because I know she can see what I want to do.

A lot of the athletes were upset because a lot of them want to SJ State for track and field, but that was the choice that SJU made, and they had to see if that was a good or bad decision for them. I think they’re starting to see that it wasn’t a good or bad decision for them.

Relative to myself, the fact that I’ve gotten up to more, I’m just trying to be a role model for students that are coming and other causes around the world. I think that everyone has to be emancipated.

Everyone has something that they can relate to the world that as a kid I always dreamed of being.”

I thought about how I wasn’t a free man until that day ... I felt like I was being emancipated right there on that podium.

What have you been doing recently? I’ve been doing lectures around the world. I’ve been involved in various causes around the world. I think that everyone has to be emancipated.

How do you feel about SJ State no longer having a track and field team? I think the fact that we did something in Mexico City that was so far ahead of itself, that it was so far ahead of itself, with all the negative print and comment, I think they need to take those a few moments, that we were trying to burn down America and all the things that we did at the time of the Olympic protest. SJ State had no history of racism and prejudice.

I think Peter Norman freed himself the same way.

Los Angeles News: Prop 34: Life imprisonment preferred over the death penalty

By Kimberley Diaz

Proposition 34 attempts to eliminate the death penalty and replace it with life imprisonment without parole. Those who support the initiative say it will save money by avoiding the costs associated with capital punishment. Opponents argue it would allow for the possibility of release if the inmate commits another crime. The proposition is set to come before the voters in November.

The state court threw out the death penalty in the 1970s, but allowed it to be reinstated when Proposition 7 passed in 1978 that increased penalties for first and second degree murder, as well as provided for the death penalty in cases where it is improper to re- quire either the death penalty or life without parole, according to Ballotpedia.

Currently 720 inmates are waiting on death row, according to the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation. A second major provision would create a $180 million fund that would be available to the state General Fund for law enforcement agencies to help solve more heinous and rape cases, according to the California Legislative guide pro- provided by the office of the California Secretary of State.

The death penalty in Cali- fornia is governed under the Criminal Practices Act of 1931, according to the California Legislative guide pro- vided by the office of the California Secretary of State.

DIFFICULTY RATING: ★★★☆☆
I’m pretty much an alien to this whole relationship business. I need an outsider’s perch, I’ve seen quite a bit. I’ve seen some rare, some honest affection and loyalty, as well as so many of those things. I’ve seen sad, dishonest, toxic, shallow, bitter, betrayed and lies. I despise the word “relationship.” The idea of any sort of lifetime failure of language. “Relationship” conjures up so many things and nothing. It could solidify something solid and true, or it could stand for something as shallow and mean. It Gucci-wrapped facade off the set of a cheap soap opera.

I’ve known plenty of people over the years who considered themselves experts on relationships who wouldn’t know what they were if it jumped up and bit them in the ass, and certainly wouldn’t realize it if they did. Why? What the hell is love anyway?

According to the popular culture of relationships, love is one thing among others. Sex. Some of us are given popular obsessions with the sexual aspect of relationships has a giant influence on young people’s ability to find and keep good mates. If there is one great lesson I’ve learned from the love relationships I’ve seen, it’s this: Real love isn’t sexy.

In years past, if someone told you they were in a relationship, I would likely ask: “Are you in love, or are you just having sex with someone on a regular basis?” I like to think that I’m a more perceptive person these days, however, the less obvious it is, I don’t ask this question any more than that, for fear I would be partly hang on to this.

Let me make it clear right now, I’m not against sex. I’m not advocating chaste relation ships. I think of sex, in its most beautiful form, as an intimate moment of couples engaged in an illicit, short-lived sham of a “relationship” that could even go beyond people into hyperbole, lies and cruelty. I’m not love. If it is neither love the self nor does it engender love where it doesn’t exist before. More sexuality, on its own, is a rotten, stupid, tragic core to a pathetic, shallow version of love — real, un-sexy love. It’s all the more tragic a situation if one of the victims of times relationships made that most central of relationship mistakes: Mis- taking lust for love.

Our cultural obsession with sex in relationships causes us to select potential mates on superficiality, primarily appearance, a habit that can be as stupid as it is bad.

The next time you’re thinking of approaching a “hoes & hoes” and being beast which your real motivations are. Do you like her? Or do you just want to hang with her?

You might not be any thing to her but a disposable accessory, just like the last most. Pretty boys have their downsides too. Many of them tend to be quite ex perienced at feigning sensitivity and commitment, when in reality the real agenda is to get you drunk and screw you, just like the last one. But hey, women seem to find that attractive?

For men happen. Too many times I’ve seen too many people I love about burn themselves and those around them in an ill advised flit of sex artificially, pitying, sacrificing real love, friendship, happiness and more on the altar of glamour ous sex. It’s all the more tragic a situation if one of the victims of times relationships made that most central of relationship mistakes: Mis- taking lust for love.
