Comparative Philosophy is an open-access, independent peer-reviewed international journal of philosophy, with emphasis on the constructive engagement of distinct approaches to philosophical issues and problems from different philosophical traditions (whether distinguished culturally or by styles/orientations) for the sake of their joint contributions to the development of the common philosophical enterprise and of contemporary society, and on general theory and methodology of comparative philosophy. [For further information about the emphasis, coverage and orientation of the journal, see the homepage of its website.]

Comparative Philosophy is published in English on the World Wide Web openly accessible without subscription cost. Its current co-publishers are the Center for Comparative Philosophy & University Library, San Jose State University, USA, and bepress, USA.

Comparative Philosophy is to primarily publish original articles of high-quality. Submissions of articles to Comparative Philosophy are judged through a blind refereeing process and selected for publication on the basis of their academic quality, relevance to constructive engagement, and significance to comparative philosophy. The editorial team is free to publish as few articles as are judged to meet a high standard of quality. Depending on need, the Journal might include a special column of essays on a specific theme, a "Constructive-Engagement Dialogue" section, or a "Recent Work" section.

Comparative Philosophy is currently a biannual journal (January/February and July/August of each year). The Journal is published in a typeset format that can be read on-screen or printed by the reader. Besides the ISSN of the Journal, the physical appearance and Universal Resource Locator (URLs) are permanently fixed to allow for reliable citations.

The copyright of an article published by Comparative Philosophy remains with its author(s); Due to the open-access nature and for the sake of its open-access management records, the Journal can manage rights and permissions for other uses of the article (such as its translation or reprint) if the relevant requests are made to the Journal, while the author(s) also can handle such cases by themselves in accordance with the open-access policy, provided that full reference is made to Comparative Philosophy as the original (English) medium of publication and that the case result is notified to the Journal. The digital articles published in the Journal can be used within the online environment. Institutions can preserve a second copy of articles published by their researchers in the institutional repository.
