An SJS sophomore was found dead in his apartment early yesterday, a week after making a phone call to a friend saying he was having a nervous breakdown.

John Michael Olson, 19, of Milo Park, described by his roommates as容易和onoes的, was found lying unresponsive on the floor of his third-floor room at 2 a.m. by his roommate, J.C. Logan. The police were called to the scene and Olson was pronounced dead at 2:30 a.m. by Dr. Dean Keedy, a San Jose police coroner. According to Logan, Olson had been experiencing a nervous breakdown for the past few days, and had been seen by a psychiatrist at SJS.

"He told me he was having a nervous breakdown," Logan said. "He had been seeing a doctor for a long time, but it was the first time he had been in the hospital." Logan was with Olson at the time of his death, and saw him lying on the floor when he returned to the apartment.

According to Logan, Olson had been in the hospital for a nervous breakdown earlier this year, and had been prescribed medication. However, Logan said that Olson had not been taking the medication regularly.

"He had been having trouble with his nerves," Logan said. "He had been prescribed medication, but he wasn't taking it regularly." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

"He was acting strange," Logan said. "He had been lying on the floor for days, and he wasn't eating or sleeping." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

A SJS sophomore was found dead in his apartment early yesterday, a week after making a phone call to a friend saying he was having a nervous breakdown.

John Michael Olson, 19, of Milo Park, described by his roommates as easy to get along with and someone who did his best to please others, was found lying unresponsive on the floor of his third-floor room at 2 a.m. by his roommate, J.C. Logan. The police were called to the scene and Olson was pronounced dead at 2:30 a.m. by Dr. Dean Keedy, a San Jose police coroner. According to Logan, Olson had been experiencing a nervous breakdown for the past few days, and had been seen by a psychiatrist at SJS.

"He told me he was having a nervous breakdown," Logan said. "He had been seeing a doctor for a long time, but it was the first time he had been in the hospital." Logan was with Olson at the time of his death, and saw him lying on the floor when he returned to the apartment.

According to Logan, Olson had been in the hospital for a nervous breakdown earlier this year, and had been prescribed medication. However, Logan said that Olson had not been taking the medication regularly.

"He had been having trouble with his nerves," Logan said. "He had been prescribed medication, but he wasn't taking it regularly." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

"He was acting strange," Logan said. "He had been lying on the floor for days, and he wasn't eating or sleeping." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

A SJS sophomore was found dead in his apartment early yesterday, a week after making a phone call to a friend saying he was having a nervous breakdown.

John Michael Olson, 19, of Milo Park, described by his roommates as easy to get along with and someone who did his best to please others, was found lying unresponsive on the floor of his third-floor room at 2 a.m. by his roommate, J.C. Logan. The police were called to the scene and Olson was pronounced dead at 2:30 a.m. by Dr. Dean Keedy, a San Jose police coroner. According to Logan, Olson had been experiencing a nervous breakdown for the past few days, and had been seen by a psychiatrist at SJS.

"He told me he was having a nervous breakdown," Logan said. "He had been seeing a doctor for a long time, but it was the first time he had been in the hospital." Logan was with Olson at the time of his death, and saw him lying on the floor when he returned to the apartment.

According to Logan, Olson had been in the hospital for a nervous breakdown earlier this year, and had been prescribed medication. However, Logan said that Olson had not been taking the medication regularly.

"He had been having trouble with his nerves," Logan said. "He had been prescribed medication, but he wasn't taking it regularly." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

"He was acting strange," Logan said. "He had been lying on the floor for days, and he wasn't eating or sleeping." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

A SJS sophomore was found dead in his apartment early yesterday, a week after making a phone call to a friend saying he was having a nervous breakdown.

John Michael Olson, 19, of Milo Park, described by his roommates as easy to get along with and someone who did his best to please others, was found lying unresponsive on the floor of his third-floor room at 2 a.m. by his roommate, J.C. Logan. The police were called to the scene and Olson was pronounced dead at 2:30 a.m. by Dr. Dean Keedy, a San Jose police coroner. According to Logan, Olson had been experiencing a nervous breakdown for the past few days, and had been seen by a psychiatrist at SJS.

"He told me he was having a nervous breakdown," Logan said. "He had been seeing a doctor for a long time, but it was the first time he had been in the hospital." Logan was with Olson at the time of his death, and saw him lying on the floor when he returned to the apartment.

According to Logan, Olson had been in the hospital for a nervous breakdown earlier this year, and had been prescribed medication. However, Logan said that Olson had not been taking the medication regularly.

"He had been having trouble with his nerves," Logan said. "He had been prescribed medication, but he wasn't taking it regularly." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

"He was acting strange," Logan said. "He had been lying on the floor for days, and he wasn't eating or sleeping." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

A SJS sophomore was found dead in his apartment early yesterday, a week after making a phone call to a friend saying he was having a nervous breakdown.

John Michael Olson, 19, of Milo Park, described by his roommates as easy to get along with and someone who did his best to please others, was found lying unresponsive on the floor of his third-floor room at 2 a.m. by his roommate, J.C. Logan. The police were called to the scene and Olson was pronounced dead at 2:30 a.m. by Dr. Dean Keedy, a San Jose police coroner. According to Logan, Olson had been experiencing a nervous breakdown for the past few days, and had been seen by a psychiatrist at SJS.

"He told me he was having a nervous breakdown," Logan said. "He had been seeing a doctor for a long time, but it was the first time he had been in the hospital." Logan was with Olson at the time of his death, and saw him lying on the floor when he returned to the apartment.

According to Logan, Olson had been in the hospital for a nervous breakdown earlier this year, and had been prescribed medication. However, Logan said that Olson had not been taking the medication regularly.

"He had been having trouble with his nerves," Logan said. "He had been prescribed medication, but he wasn't taking it regularly." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

"He was acting strange," Logan said. "He had been lying on the floor for days, and he wasn't eating or sleeping." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

A SJS sophomore was found dead in his apartment early yesterday, a week after making a phone call to a friend saying he was having a nervous breakdown.

John Michael Olson, 19, of Milo Park, described by his roommates as easy to get along with and someone who did his best to please others, was found lying unresponsive on the floor of his third-floor room at 2 a.m. by his roommate, J.C. Logan. The police were called to the scene and Olson was pronounced dead at 2:30 a.m. by Dr. Dean Keedy, a San Jose police coroner. According to Logan, Olson had been experiencing a nervous breakdown for the past few days, and had been seen by a psychiatrist at SJS.

"He told me he was having a nervous breakdown," Logan said. "He had been seeing a doctor for a long time, but it was the first time he had been in the hospital." Logan was with Olson at the time of his death, and saw him lying on the floor when he returned to the apartment.

According to Logan, Olson had been in the hospital for a nervous breakdown earlier this year, and had been prescribed medication. However, Logan said that Olson had not been taking the medication regularly.

"He had been having trouble with his nerves," Logan said. "He had been prescribed medication, but he wasn't taking it regularly." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

"He was acting strange," Logan said. "He had been lying on the floor for days, and he wasn't eating or sleeping." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

A SJS sophomore was found dead in his apartment early yesterday, a week after making a phone call to a friend saying he was having a nervous breakdown.

John Michael Olson, 19, of Milo Park, described by his roommates as easy to get along with and someone who did his best to please others, was found lying unresponsive on the floor of his third-floor room at 2 a.m. by his roommate, J.C. Logan. The police were called to the scene and Olson was pronounced dead at 2:30 a.m. by Dr. Dean Keedy, a San Jose police coroner. According to Logan, Olson had been experiencing a nervous breakdown for the past few days, and had been seen by a psychiatrist at SJS.

"He told me he was having a nervous breakdown," Logan said. "He had been seeing a doctor for a long time, but it was the first time he had been in the hospital." Logan was with Olson at the time of his death, and saw him lying on the floor when he returned to the apartment.

According to Logan, Olson had been in the hospital for a nervous breakdown earlier this year, and had been prescribed medication. However, Logan said that Olson had not been taking the medication regularly.

"He had been having trouble with his nerves," Logan said. "He had been prescribed medication, but he wasn't taking it regularly." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.

"He was acting strange," Logan said. "He had been lying on the floor for days, and he wasn't eating or sleeping." Logan said that Olson had been seen by his roommates as being "very strange" in the days leading up to his death.