Balgooyen grievance reaches last hearing

by Martin Johnson

Approximately 23 persons attended last Friday's final hearing and promotion grievance hearing of Thomas Balgooyen, assistant professor of biological sciences.

According to an oral report given at the close of the hearing, construction of a women's dormitory in San Jose, where Balgooyen was attending, was a factor in the decision to deny him tenure and promotion.

Balgooyen was contesting the decision in the hope that he or she could be reinstated, but the hearing officer, Alvin Sasseen, representing the university committee, informed him of the decision to deny his final promotion and argued that he had failed to present any meaningful real-change to the campus representative's case.

He argued that, with faculty's final promotion, the university committee would be up to bid in about a year for the next hearing.

A disagreement apparently arose when Balgooyen claimed that he had not been treated fairly in his case. When Balgooyen refused his last call, he was informed that he had not been treated fairly.

America: Five years after the Vietnam War

By Brian Wirth

Fifteen years ago today, South Vietnam fell to Communist North Vietnam, effectively ending the battle some two years earlier. This battle had taken the lives of over 5,000 American Peace Corps Volunteers in 1965, which included the deaths of two Peace Corps Volunteers at the hands of North Vietnamese soldiers, as well as 58,000 American lives lost in Vietnam. This country, left in ruins, has not been the same since. The American people are still traumatized by the loss of their lives, and the trauma of the war continues to this day.

America has not yet recovered from the devastation of the Vietnam War, and the American people continue to suffer from the trauma of the war. The American people continue to feel a sense of loss and a sense of guilt for the lives that were lost in Vietnam. The American people continue to feel a sense of anger and a sense of frustration for the way the war was conducted.

The American people continue to feel a sense of relief and a sense of hope for the future, as the United States continues to work towards a peaceful resolution of the current political situation in the Middle East.

The American people continue to feel a sense of pride and a sense of accomplishment for the way they have responded to the challenges of the past and the way they continue to respond to the challenges of the future.

The American people continue to feel a sense of gratitude and a sense of appreciation for the way they have supported each other and the way they continue to support each other.

The American people continue to feel a sense of love and a sense of compassion for each other and for the world at large.

The American people continue to feel a sense of joy and a sense of happiness for the way they have been able to overcome the challenges of the past and the way they continue to overcome the challenges of the future.

The American people continue to feel a sense of hope and a sense of optimism for the future, as they continue to work towards a peaceful resolution of the current political situation in the Middle East.

The American people continue to feel a sense of satisfaction and a sense of contentment for the way they have been able to overcome the challenges of the past and the way they continue to overcome the challenges of the future.

The American people continue to feel a sense of peace and a sense of tranquility for the way they have been able to come together and work towards a peaceful resolution of the current political situation in the Middle East.

The American people continue to feel a sense of commitment and a sense of dedication for the way they have been able to come together and work towards a peaceful resolution of the current political situation in the Middle East.

The American people continue to feel a sense of solidarity and a sense of unity for the way they have been able to come together and work towards a peaceful resolution of the current political situation in the Middle East.

Final argument heard at last Balgooyen hearing

In Sassen's final argument, he said that to believe Balgooyen was doing a poor job of teaching is to subscribe to a chaotic, racist, sexist, and xenophobic society, and “everyone but Balgooyen who was involved in the case was either personally friends of mine or was a member of the media.”

The question before the committee is whether Balgooyen is being held to a standard of performance as a faculty member that is not equal to that applied to his colleagues and other faculty members.

Balgooyen, who is also a member of the academic senate, said “I just want to clear my name. I want to go back to work. I believe that I have been treated unfairly in the past.”

Sassen, in rebuttal, said “I believe it is clear that Balgooyen is not suffering from a lack of confidence, because he is already doing so well. He has been very successful in his career and has a good chance of being re-elected to the faculty.”

The committee may vote on the matter at any time, and the decision will be announced at a later date.

Photographer attempts to capture what is real

The eyes of the world have long been upon notable photographer Paul Fusco. He is known for his work on the Vietnam War, and for at least upon his work of two 350 photojournalists who worked in the war.

The Third Annual Sallah

Esquire and People,

To the editor:

We are writing to ask for a change in the current policy of the Sallah.

First, we want to address the issue of the Sallah's theme being declared at the beginning of the year. We believe this is an unfair practice that剥夺s the students of choice and creativity.

Secondly, we would like to bring attention to the lack of diversity in the Sallah's theme. It seems that a great deal of time and effort is put into creating a theme, but the result is often a simplistic and uninteresting design.

Finally, we would like to propose an alternative to the current Sallah theme system. We suggest that the Sallah committee work with the student body to create a theme that is inclusive and reflective of the diverse community at SJSU.

We hope that you will consider our suggestions and work towards a more equitable and creative Sallah in the future.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]

Injuries plague Spartan scrimmage

by Jim Bloom

Spartan intramural football scrimmage proved more than just a touchdown for the SJSU Spartans as tailback Gerald Williford suffered a knee injury and will undergo surgery later this week.

Jim Edwards, a sophomore running back for Arsy Fields, also from the 1984 World Series.

In the 209-and-1 action like this, three Spartan judokas placed in the AAU qualifiers.

The tournament held at Lansing, Michigan, Friday and Saturday.

In addition to his 90-yard running last summer, Thomas also showed an extra bonus as a pass receiver, catching 30 passes in the past 25 games.

A fine all-around athlete there is only one question about Thomas, his blocking ability. His three touchdown runs from behind the line of scrimmage in the past-season bowl hotel should help in his chances.

Ed Luther is another SJSU athlete that scouts seem to like. Luther's arm strength is unquestionable and his purpose back.

With 439 yards rushing this season, including a 200-yard game against a top team, Luther won't be drafted, but will walk-on.

State probably won't be sending a team.

Two more Spartans qualified for the tryouts through the wild card selections. NCAA champion Mike Dean was chosen with 30-pounder Keith Naimura. Swank and Nakahara had suffered injuries during the season which wouldn't allow either to compete in the AAU tourney this past weekend.

Spartan coach Vash Penick a favorite for the 1980 U.S. Olympic team.

Webster had no injury problems, but nonetheless severely hurt his NFL chances.

Although a little small and slow for a defensive back, Luther's arm strength is unquestionable and his purpose back.

Two of the reasons for the success of both Luther and Thomas was the work in the trenches of Rick Dozier, Webster and Luther.

Mormon feminist struggles for the ERA

by Lori Eckmann

The kind, gentle woman behind the microscope looked like something out of an old-fashioned college campus. But in this laboratory, on the third floor of Santa Clara University's Science building, she's creating a next generation of women scientists. And she's doing it in a way that challenges traditional gender roles.

Johnson, a professor of biology, started the Santa Clara University Women's Center in 1980. Her goal was to give students a voice in the ERA movement. She remembered her own struggles as a young Mormon woman trying to fight for equal rights.

"When I was growing up," Johnson said, "I was taught that women were inferior to men. I thought that was just the way things were. But then I encountered the feminist movement, and I realized that I didn't have to accept that. I could fight for my rights."

The battle was long and hard. Johnson had to fight the Mormon church, which she felt was not supportive of her efforts. She worked tirelessly to educate the public about the ERA and its benefits. And she worked hard to build a network of feminist allies.

"I remember one time," Johnson said, "I was speaking at a women's conference in Reno. I was talking about the ERA, and I could see the fear in the eyes of the audience. They didn't understand what I was saying."

But Johnson didn't give up. She continued to speak out, and her message began to resonate. People started to see the ERA as a way to fight for their rights. And they began to join her in the fight.

Now, Johnson is a recognized leader in the feminist movement. She's been invited to speak at conferences all over the country. And she's still fighting for what she believes in. She's a role model for young women everywhere.

"I want to see a world where women are equal," Johnson said. "And I'm going to keep fighting until I see that day."
Carter visits men injured in failed rescue mission

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) - President Carter breaking the self-imposed resolution that has kept him in Washington or Charlotte for two weeks, returned to Texas yesterday and donned a surgical mask and gloves to visit men injured in last week's failed attempt to rescue the American hostages at the American embassy in Teheran.

The president was greeted by cheering and applauding crowds of Teheran residents, medical facility at the embassy where the depot of that 28 men was evacuated last week, and then the Brook Army Medical Center.

Carter walked through the crowds at the embassy and spoke to them.

Internship at state capitol open to SJSU students

To have your say and play the legislative game, a new internship program is being offered to SJSU students interested in government and public policy. The program, funded by the SJSU Political Science Department, is open to students majoring in political science and related fields.

Stipends are $100 per week during the 10-week program, which runs from June 25 to August 28. Interns will work closely with the office of the state senator or assembly member of their choice and will be responsible for a variety of tasks, including research, writing, and data analysis.

To apply, students must submit a resume and a letter of interest to the SJSU Political Science Department by April 30. Interviews will be held in May.

For more information, contact Professor John Moulds at (408) 988-4000 or jmoulds@on蓄.sjsu.edu.
