Spirit alums fight for right to cheer

By Emily B. Zurich

DAILY STAFF WRITER

The San Jose State University alumni cheerleaders appear to have been ousted might not perform at Saturday's homecoming football game for the first time in about four years.

Michael Rehm, assistant athletics director for the athletic department, said he made the decision to forbid the alumni cheerleaders from performing after much discussion with them.

He said the current cheerleaders have new uniforms and a new coach.

According to Rehm, this would make it difficult for the alumni cheerleaders to integrate with the existing squad and perform together as they have in previous years.

"The alumni would be dressed differently," Rehm said. "They don't know the same style as the new coach. I want them to look like a cohesive unit and I don't think that's going to be possible."

Some alumni cheerleaders expressed disappointment in this year's homecoming plans.

"I'm really hurt by the decision," said Marzie Ventura, a junior majoring in criminal justice.

Ventura was an SJSU cheerleader from 1998 to 1999.

Laura Burgess, a former captain of the cheerleading squad who graduated from SJSU in 1998, said she regrets the tradition being broken.

"I was really shocked," Burgess said.

Kari Cosentino, who was on the squad for three years, agreed that the tradition is important.

"It's a tradition that shouldn't be broken — ever," Cosentino said.

Saralyn Boyd-Winslow, the former cheerleading coach, said she was approached by the alumni because they were upset about the decision.

She said she thinks the alumni and cur-

Value of propositions discussed

By Liz Cloutman

DAILY STAFF WRITER

Wednesday afternoon, professor Rodolfo Gonzalez and associate professor Tom Means, who teach in the San Jose State University department of economics, offered students the opportunity to examine and discuss propositions 34 and 36 from a different perspective than the usual for-or-against arguments. These initiatives, along with eight others, will be on the California general election ballot in November.

Instead, Gonzalez and Means asked the nine students present to consider the economic implications of the two initiatives.

The ninety-minute departmental presentation - the first in a series of three - took place in the Almaden room of the Student Union.

Using principles of economics and statistics, as well as supply-and-demand graphs, to support their view, Gonzalez and Means came to the conclusion that neither proposition, if voted into law, would be able to achieve its goals.

Gonzalez presented most of the arguments.

According to the California Official Voter Information Guide, Proposition 34 would limit individual campaign contributions per election and limits contributions to political parties or committees for the purpose of supporting or defeating candidates. If passed, it also would establish voluntary spending limits and require the ballot pamphlet to list candidates who agree to

SJSU student tells why we have low school spirit

I am tired of reading the same editorial letters about lack of school spirit. Every week I read the same bull about many San Jose State University students not participating in our college athletic events.

I can honestly say that I am one of those many thousands of students who are not involved in this school.

One main reason why there is such low attendance in athletic games is because the student body lacks school spirit. Why might this be?

Well, maybe this school isn't really a real university, but in fact just another commuter college. I see many students walk straight to class from their cars and then straight to their cars from class.

They don't care if Arroyo passed for 300-plus yards, or if the team won against Stanford for the third year in a row. Everyone has their mind set on other things.

But, can't you students make time to support your team?

Well, to all the alumni: SJSU has changed since you have been apart of it.

I imagine and hear about all the athletic events that took place in the past: friends and students getting together for a tailgate party, guys throwing the ball around while girls crowd around the keg, everyone feeling very in the moment.

Well, I'm sorry to say that this isn't how it is anymore. The city of San Jose has changed.

In the past, I imagine that there wasn't much to do on the weekends but attend an SJSU football game. These days, San Jose has turned into a city where people can go out and have other types of fun.

It's a shame that few students have school spirit because our teams do so well and no one gives them the credit they deserve.

So, with everyone berating students about not attending games, I, one of the thousands of non-spirited SJSU students, will be attending this week's game — not because of the many complaints, but because our team deserved the extra support.

The only way this school will regain its spirit is if SJSU starts looking like a real university rather than what it is now: a commuter college.

Election could bring changes in women's rights

This letter is in response to Daniel T. Offerman's letter that appeared in the Spartan Daily on Tuesday, Oct. 10.

Mr. Offerman claims that abortion should occur only when the mother's health is in jeopardy and this is why he is voting for George W. Bush.

I believe, just as Mr. Offerman does, that abortion should not be used as an "out" to correct careless mistakes.

I don't think that anyone truly believes that abortion is a good thing, some just recognize it's occasional necessity.

If Mr. Offerman truly believes that abortion should be allowed when it is used to save a mother's life, then he should not vote for Bush.

It is important for people to be aware that George W's abortion plan is to end all abortion, even when abortions are necessary. It must be up to the mother whether she wants to put herself through the awful experience of terminating a pregnancy.

The real issue here is that the next president of the United States is going to have the opportunity to appoint several new Supreme Court justices.

If George W. Bush is elected there is a large possibility that one of the most important Supreme Court cases in regards to women's rights as well as women's health will be changed.

This will not only change the law on abortion but will be a huge step backward for women's rights.

I would encourage voters to examine this entire picture, not just one piece of legislature, before hastily choosing a candidate.

In my opinion, any one who votes for George W. Bush truly believes that women are second-class citizens. So I say, if you hate women, go ahead and vote for Dubya.

Rated-PG girl fed up with the R-rated world

I'm not superstitious. I don't feel a need to toss salt over my shoulder, and I have no qualms about walking under a ladder. For me, Friday the 13th isn't any different than any other Friday.

The day does, however, bring to mind the movie of the same name. I saw only a fraction of the first "Friday the 13th" movie as a child, and that scared me enough to avoid horror flicks altogether.

I went against that determination a few years ago when I saw my first horror film in years, "Scream." Although the first "Scream" movie gave me a stomachache, I proceeded to see its sequels.

These movies gave me a renewed sense of the reasons I chose to shun a majority of R-rated films. Today's movies — and the movie industry in general — worry me, and I am not just referring to "Scream" and the like.

A friend I met this summer sees an average of four movies a week, the majority of which are R-rated. Her favorite films include "Girl Interrupted" and "Fight Club" because she feels they have important messages.

She acts as if it is beneath her to see a feel-good PG movie and never watches a G-rated flick unless it's a Disney cartoon. To her, the rating is almost synonymous with quality.

Deanna, who openly admits her movie addiction, analyzes every movie she sees and reads almost every entertainment magazine available.

She said that we, as a society, live vicariously through our celebrities. The truth of that statement is obvious. The majority of the magazines lining grocery store checkout aisles are covered with celebrity photos and scandalous blurbs about their lives.

Monica L. Ewing
THE WAY IT IS

Even if you grant that most people aren't as involved as Deanna is with Hollywood's glitz and glam, you have to admit that movies have a profound impact upon our culture.

And that worries me.

Such emotions as lasting love and the triumph of the human spirit somehow became sappy cast offs of serious-thinking theatergoers and critics.

Every movie that critics dub "intellectually stimulating" is loaded with violence (verbal and physical), vulgarity and explicit sex.

And that's exactly what it seems the public wants.

Another friend I met during the summer said she is disappointed if a movie doesn't have graphic sex.

Movies are rarely based on what is real and lasting, and instead are based on what gives temporary narcissistic pleasure.

Big-screen flicks aren't the only culprits. In a huge majority of television shows, casual sex replaced lifelong commitments long ago.

Far-fetched macho, he-man antics substituted true heroism.

Porn is mainstream while morality has been sidelined.

Impossible stunts and flashy clothes replaced integrity and social responsibility.

The F-word replaces every potentially intelligent word flung from people's mouths, both on the screen and in real life.

Almost every movie today that has something intelligent to say is packaged with senseless violence or raucous living to make it palatable for today's audience.

Disturbing films displaying all of society's maladjusted, perverted tendencies get the nods from the Hollywood elite.

You would think that living in such an advanced society we would have moved beyond the boob-fests that sell movies today.

No, movies are not the cause of society's ills, but they take existing dysfunction and make us look at it and accept it as normal, even desirable.

We have become desensitized, so that hurting someone or burning down a cop car, as was done during the Los Angeles riots last summer, seems like a commonplace occurrence.

What was once society's scourge is being dragged out of the closet, polished up and peddled to the public as something new and exciting.

Movies show us characters blowing stuff up and knocking down people with bullets as if they were of no more worth than bowling pins.

Life is full of consequences. Viewers need to see the grief that violence creates, if only to prevent such tragedies as the Columbine shootings.

Humanity's maladies have always been with us, from abuse and discrimination to murder, but in the movies, those things are typical, everyday occurrences.

And this mentality is creeping into real life.

It's hard to say if the chicken or the egg came first — did society's standards lower because of movies or did movies degrade because of society?

I would say it is a little of both.

Study after study by psychologists prove that televised violence affects children, so no one can say movies aren't changing us in some way, if only jading our viewpoint of the world.

Like Helen Keller said, "Life is a daring adventure or it's nothing."

Maybe we have nothing, so we seek the most extreme adventures to make us feel alive.

So many of us commute in a dazed, irritated state along congested highways, put in our eight or 10 hours, only to fight traffic at the end of the day and slump into the sofa with a beer or soda, vegetating in front of the television.

It's no wonder we seek out outrageous action, unrestrained fantasy, artificial beauty and intense passion in our entertainment. But, at what cost?

Friday the 13th: The actual day to be afraid

I was walking to my car at 3 o'clock early Thursday morning under a full moon when I started to feel a cloud of creepiness looming.

Part of it may have been the temperature outside, which was turning me into a Popsicle (us local boys never wear jackets until our butts are frozen solid).

It may have been the ghost-town-like atmosphere on campus, where you swear someone is looking at you from behind a dark window.

Or maybe it's that time of year when we're more paranoid than usual.

When we try to make sure we stay away from danger and troubled people and places.

When we are constantly watching our backs at night. And sounds of howling on a full moon means there might just be a werewolf out on the prowl.

No, I'm not talking about Halloween. That superficial holiday on Oct. 31 when everyone puts on silly costumes and walks the streets from house to house asking for candy was made-up to fool you.

No one wants kids running around in the dark on a night when there are evil spirits running amok and wolf-men are looking for some baby back ribs. That's why those people at Hallmark made up Halloween.

The real day of heightened superstitions, paranormal activity and ghosts and goblins is Friday the 13th, and it can happen throughout the year.

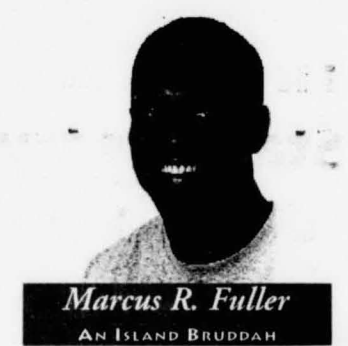

This particular day sends chills down the spines of people all over the world.

Ever wonder why it's not Monday the 16th or Wednesday the fourth?

There is some history behind Friday the 13th, and I'm not talking about a little boy named Jason in the gore-heavy horror flick. I'm talking about real life.

First off, if you rearranged your schedule this week so that you're all alone in bed with a pillow over your face today, you're most definitely a triskaidekaphobe or someone who is superstitious of the No. 13.

But, don't worry, you're not alone.

Marcus R. Fuller
AN ISLAND BRUDDAH

People have been in fear of the No. 13, and especially Friday the 13th, since Biblical days.

According to Bible, Jesus attended the Last Supper with his 12 disciples. There were 13 seated at the sacred dinner table, one of which betrayed him.

Jesus, was then crucified on, you guessed it, a Friday.

Since then, the number and the day have been considered a bad omen.

Some people still do not invite 13 people to dinner. Some tall buildings don't have a 13th floor and some airplanes don't have 13th row.

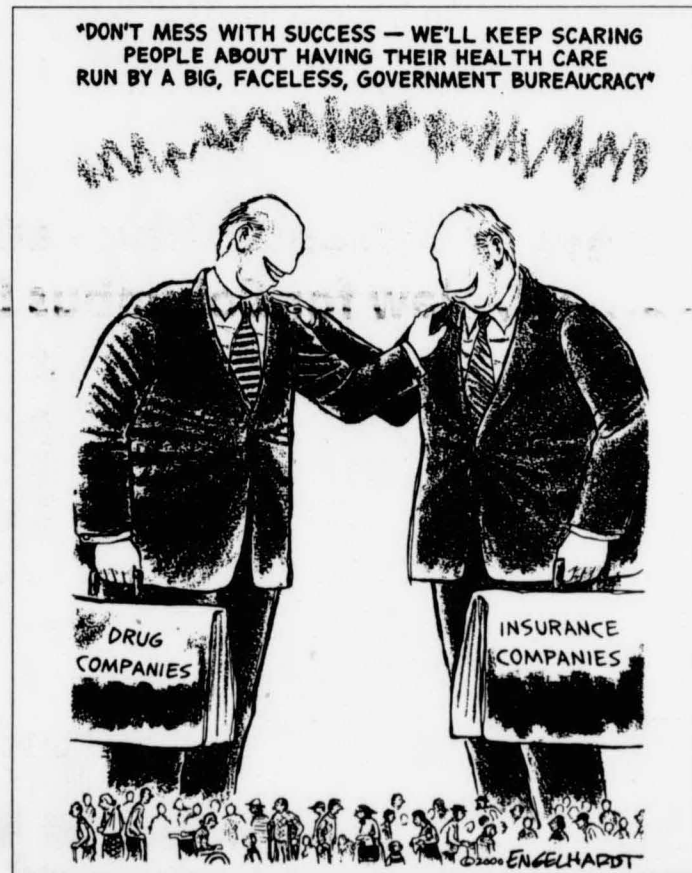

Up until the 1800s executions were held on Friday the 13th, or Hangman's Day, as it was called back then.

If you ever see floating specters with nooses around their necks, you know why.

I know some of you are quivering just thinking about what could happen to you today or in the future, but rest assured.

While Friday the 13th happens every year, it can't happen more than three times every 365 days. The last time that occurred was in 1998. The next time won't be until the year 2004, and by then you'll be so stoked about Star Wars Phantom Menace III coming out that you won't care about having some bad luck.

Marcus R. Fuller is the Spartan Daily Sports Editor. "An Island Bruddah" appears Fridays.

Abortion is not the same as the Jewish Holocaust

In Tuesday's edition of the Spartan Daily, Daniel Offerman foolishly compared the Jewish Holocaust of World War II to abortions. This is far-fetched at best.

Hitler's army attempted to destroy an entire people on its quest to take over the world.

A woman deciding what's best for her, whether financially, emotionally or physically, is a far cry from the outright torture, starvation, persecution and murder that the Jews of Europe faced.

A wise friend of mine once said that no woman should be kept pregnant against her will.

As an outsider, you don't know the circumstances surrounding the conception. You cannot make choices for others based on your own beliefs.

Do I need to remind pro-lifers of the atrocious back-alley and coat hanger abortions that killed thousands of desperate women before Roe v. Wade? The idea that some people in this country would prefer to return to that sort of tragic desperation shocks me.

The United States is trying to rid the world of socialism

From the crushing of the Paris Commune in 1871, to the invasion of Russia by the armies of every capitalist nation after the Bolshevik revolution, to the U.S. war against socialism in Indochina, to the U.S. interventions in El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua, the prime objective always of capitalist nations has been the prevention of socialism succeeding anywhere.

Now, the U.S. media want me to ignore 130 years of this history and believe that the military aid and U.S. advisers in Colombia have something to do with stopping drugs.

Give me a break!

The American people may have been conditioned by repetition and sound bites to believe this baloney, but it is a much more destructive and vicious lie than the one told by President Clinton about his sex life.

As similar to the lie told by the media that the bombing of Yugoslavia was due to great compassion by the U.S. government for the Albanians in Kosovo.

It was really to destroy the last socialist state in Europe that was refusing to yield to the privatization and deregulation demands of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank.

The U.S. government has actually collaborated with drug traffickers such as the Hmong people in Indochina, the Afghan "freedom fighters" and the Contras in Central America to defeat socialist revolutions.

This makes their claim of fighting a drug war even more ridiculous. Former DEA agent Michael Levine wrote a book called "The Big White Lie," in which he documents how the CIA brought a government to power in Bolivia in 1980 that he refers to as the "General Motors of cocaine."

Incidentally, this was the coup in which Klaus Barbie and other European fascists participated. Horrible things are being done by the paramilitary armies in Colombia that are armed and trained by the United States.

Pacific radio's program, "Democracy Now," reported that a village of men, women and children were massacred by paramilitaries using chain saws to slowly dismember people and kill them.

This is the doctrine of low-intensity warfare. The most despicable and horrifying thing imaginable is done so that U.S. forces won't need to be deployed.

After Vietnam, the American people will no longer tolerate significant American casualties. Also, a frightened, intimidated population is ideal as a labor force for sweatshops because they won't unionize.

Call your representatives in Congress and end this evil in Colombia.

Al Gore's new Social Security plan falls short

Al Gore still doesn't get it! Again, he exposes his inherent ignorance and cynical nature. For example, the California Teacher's Retirement System, the third largest public employee plan in the country with its $112.7 billion in assets, reported (June 30) a 12.7 percent annual return on its investments.

Al Gore's touted old-New-Deal, passe Social Security plan barely earns 1 percent. No wonder informed young people believe more in flying saucers and that Elvis lives than believe in the solvency of Social Security for them.

Similarly, CALpers, the largest retirement system in the public sector invests 60 to 70 percent of its funds in corporate securities.

Nevertheless, Al Gore claims these types of retirement plans are "too risky" for more Americans.

How much longer will Democrats tolerate outworn socialistic governmental programs?

Another alumnus complains about low game turnout

I was at the last football game and was sorely disappointed at the lack of student attendance at the game.

The day was great. The tickets were free, and the team is good.

Aside from the fact that some students may not like football, the sport is an ambassador for our school.

The team (and the other teams too) make San Jose State University recognizable and that adds value to your diploma.

A job interview is more than what you learn in school. The interview is about you and the presumed prestige of your school by the interviewer.

Football (and sports in general) help place SJSU on the map. They help the school name become recognizable. You owe it to yourself and the other students to support the football team (and the other teams).

Whether you live on campus or commute to school, that diploma is your key to the future.

The fame of your university is another key. Support the university by supporting athletics.

Athletics is an intangible value, but the perception they create will make you more attractive as a future employee.

I hope to see you out at the game on Oct. 14. Get your free ticket, invite your friends, and have a great day at Spartan Stadium.

Lesson in ethics and law for Columbus Day

Columbus Day: Columbus discovered Native Americans and we discovered what student body president Leo Davila is up to.

President Leo is simply stacking up the Student Union Board the way the U.S. president stacks up the Supreme Court in his favor. (see: Letters: Ted Rudow, Oct. 9, 2000).

Ethical: No. Lawful: Yes.

The only advantage I can see to this arrangement at this time is in streamlining the decision to rename the Student Union after Cesar E. Chavez. (if that is what they want).

Ethical: No. Lawful: Yes.

Spartan Stadium on Seventh Street has been the home of San Jose State University football since 1933. The stadium currently holds 30,578 for football and soccer games. The U.S. women's soccer team played Brazil in front of a crowd of 26,853 on Sept. 1 at the stadium.

Spartan Stadium, staying alive

By Erik Anderson

DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Although Spartan Stadium may have lost the Xtreme Football League Demons to Pacific Bell Park, it still has other positives.

The Demon's vice president and general manager, Mike Preacher, said that the San Jose State University stadium impressed him.

It had been chosen instead of 3Com Stadium for the Demon's home field, he said.

"It's (Spartan Stadium) a very intimate facility," he said, "a bowl (shape), with the fans very close to the action. That was appealing."

Preacher is not the only one who feels that way. Dave Baldwin, SJSU's head football coach also appreciates the stadium.

"A great atmosphere. The fans are right on top of you," he said. "It's great for (the) spectators."

Jerry Mimnaugh, executive director of Spartan Shops, has lost no time after losing the Demons in looking for other attractions to bring to Spartan Stadium.

"We feel we are the premiere soccer venue in Northern California," Mimnaugh said.

A scan of this year's calendar, revealed that of the more than 60 events held at the stadium, about 45 of them were soccer games.

"We do a lot of international sports at Spartan Stadium," Mimnaugh added.

On Sept. 27, more than 30,154 fans squeezed into the stadium to watch Mexico's national soccer team defeat Bolivia 1-0.

The two teams represented their respective nations in the World Cup, soccer's premier championship, Mimnaugh said.

The crowd was the second largest for a soccer game at Spartan Stadium.

On Sept. 1, the U.S. women's soccer team had played a match against Brazil, drawing 26,853 — the largest crowd of the season for the national team.

The stadium is also the home of Major League Soccer's San Jose Earthquakes — formerly known as the Clash.

On Dec. 31, the stadium will host the first ever Silicon Valley Football Classic between the Western Athletic Conference and the Mountain West Conference.

"This agreement assures an outstanding competitive experience in our inaugural game. The local interest will be high," said

Chuck Shelton, executive director for the bowl game in a press release dated Oct. 5.

Mimnaugh said he hopes to bring the Earthquakes' equivalent into women's professional soccer league.

"We would very much like to see them stage their matches at Spartan Stadium," Mimnaugh said. "We are in discussions with them right now."

Discussions can be complex, he added.

Typical issues covered include rent, merchandising, TV exposure, the locker rooms, as well as training facilities, he said.

The "deal points" in a contract are far ranging.

"It covers everything from A to Z," he said. "All issues have to be addressed."

Along with offering an intimate setting, the 30,000-seat stadium offers excellent sight lines, with no trees or construction poles to mar the spectator's view.

Located on Seventh Street, the stadium is not without flaws.

The first Spartan football game was played in Spartan Stadium in 1933.

And Mimnaugh concedes, it is an older stadium.

Soccer fan Osvaldo Palomino, who has attended SJSU men's games as well as a few San Jose Quake matches — about nine in all — thinks the action on the near side of the field disappears when it reaches the field's edge.

"The field is very narrow," Palomino said.

"We always have to get up (to see the action)."

Gary St. Clair, the Spartan's head soccer coach said he liked the field's intimacy.

He admitted, however, that the turf can get torn up at times.

"It makes it hard to play," he said. "It penalizes good teams."

Baldwin, with little to say about the turf, was phoenix-like. "Go look at the turf, and you'll have your answer," he said.

Mimnaugh said Spartan Shops was looking at finding new lights for those on the Stadium's east side. It is also looking into the potential of a new video scoreboard, he said.

Mimnaugh was buoyant about the stadium's future.

It had a history, he said with such notables as Pele, John Elway as well as ZZ Top performing on its field.

"Our (facility) is the right venue for a wide variety of venues," he said.

The size of the stadium with more than 30,000 seats and its intimacy make it attractive to small events as well as large."

Volleyball team wins at Fresno

DAILY STAFF REPORT

Senior middle blocker Joslynn Gallop led the Spartan volleyball team to a 14-16, 15-10, 15-8, 15-12 victory over Fresno State University Wednesday in Fresno.

Gallop had 26 kills and five blocks.

San Jose State University improved to 13-5 overall, 4-1 in the Western Athletic Conference.

Junior outside hitter Brianna Blair added 18 kills and six digs.

Freshman Kimberly Noble contributed with 14 kills, while fellow freshman Liz Hudson had 13 kills and 10 digs.

The Spartans will next play Tulsa University noon Saturday at the Event Center.

Cross Country is fifth

The Spartan men and women's cross country teams finished fifth at the Long Beach Invitational last weekend.

In the nine-team men's field, San Jose State University scored 122 points.

In the seven-team women's field SJSU had 102 points.

Junior Ana Martinez had the highest individual finish of any Spartan runner. Martinez was seventh with a time of 18:26:16.

Other women to finish in the top

40 were Janina Crain (17), Johanna Ballentine (31), Janette Najera (36), Rebekah Harmer (38) and Megan Stone (39).

Leading the men's team was senior Trevor Marca placing 13th with a time of 25:53:72.

Every Spartan runner, except for one, set personal records at the meet.

Both Matt Heard and Jesse McLeod finished in the top 30.

Heard was No. 21 with a time of 26:24:43.

McLeod was 26th with a time of 26:32:55.

The Spartan men and women's teams will compete Saturday in the Santa Clara Invitational in Belmont, Calif.

mont, Calif.

Women's golf is 11th

The SJSU women's golf team finished 11th Wednesday on the final day of the Edean Ihlanfeldt Invitational in Seattle, Wash.

Junior Marcela Leon was the top Spartan golfer at the 54-hole event. Leon tied for 26th place with a total score of 223. She finished with 76 in her final round and had one of the best opening rounds in the tournament with a par 73.

Helle Gram was SJSU's next best competitor. She finished at No. 26 with 234 points.

The Spartans ended the Invitational with 954 points, 11 points behind the University of California at Berkeley.

SPARTAN
ROUNDUP

The women's team is scheduled to compete next on Oct. 20 in the Stanford Invitational.

Singin' the lunchtime blues...

Vocalist Kaye Bohler and guitar player Bruce Ferrell, of The Kaye Bohler Blues Band, performed from noon until 1 p.m. Wednesday in the Student Union Amphitheater. The show was part of the new Nooners series sponsored by Associated Students.

limit campaign spending. It would also expand public disclosure requirements and increase penalties for violations.

In addition, Proposition 34 would limit campaign fund transfers between candidates, prohibit lobbyists from contributing to the officials they lobby and regulate use of surplus campaign funds.

The guide also summarizes Proposition 36. This initiative, if it becomes law, would require probation and a drug treatment program rather than prison terms upon conviction for possession, use, transportation for personal use or being under the influence of controlled substances. It would also authorize the dismissal of charges when treatment is completed, but would require disclosure of arrest and conviction to law enforcement. Candidates for public office, applicants for law enforcement or for state or local licenses, potential jury members and lottery contractors would also be required to disclose a conviction under this law.

Proposition 36 would permit additional probation conditions - except for the possibility of imprisonment - and prohibit using the record of an arrest or conviction without the defendant's consent to deny employment, benefits, licenses or certificates, other than those indicated above.

Gonzalez offered four arguments against Proposition 34.

The basic reason special interests exist, Gonzalez said, is that government has unlimited power to benefit people.

"There's not really a market here, but participants are buying and selling political services," Gonzalez said. "What can I expect in return for this? I can rank people as to what services they'll demand in return."

Gonzalez also said that one reason special interests prevail over the opinions of individual voters in an election because the great majority of voters won't invest the time necessary to fully understand the issues involved.

However, investing a lot of time to understand issues isn't really worth it, he said, because statistically speaking, one vote in a large electorate matters very little.

"Collectively, what everybody does has impact," he said. "What you do individually doesn't. What all others do is independent of what you do. The mathematical probability your vote will affect the election is very small. That's why special interests can manipulate the system."

Five students spoke against his view of voters as having little influence on the system, but Gonzalez wouldn't back down.

Gonzalez also said placing limits on campaign contributions also violates freedom of speech, Gonzalez said.

"The line of demarcation between supporting a candidate and expressing your opinion in an effective manner isn't clear," he said.

Gonzalez's final argument against campaign spending limits was that special interest money given to candidates would just be channeled into other markets.

He gave an example of channeling. If a special interest group were limited in the amount of money it could contribute directly to the candidate, it might then spend these funds on an advertisement supporting an issue it knows its preferred candidate favors, he said.

Then Means presented some of the possible changes and consequences that would occur if Proposition 36 became law in California.

Means said the first consequence of Proposition 36's passage would be that the penalty for using illegal substances would be lowered.

Rather than risking jail, a convicted offender would go into drug treatment. Once treatment was completed, the offender's public record would be expunged.

"The penalty is less, and thus there is an increase in drug activity," Means said. "That shifts out the supply side."

Means also said that while the costs of keeping offenders imprisoned would go down under such a law, Proposition 36 doesn't make it clear whether those savings would be offset by the need for more drug programs.

Gonzalez said in the text of Proposition 36, there's no clear provision for aiding indigent offenders in paying for drug treatment programs.

He also noted Proposition 36 includes no stated requirements for drug treatment facilities, which would be provided by the county in which an offender lives.

Joel Johnson, a senior majoring in political science and president of the SJSU Libertarians, said he found the presentation very informative.

"I found it highly valuable," Johnson said. "I'm leaving, understanding some of the economic implications of these propositions."

The next departmental presentation, which features Proposition 38 (school vouchers), is scheduled to be held at 4 p.m. on Oct. 18 in the Almaden room of the Student Union.

The final presentation, which includes propositions 35 (use of private contractors), 37 (fees, taxes and vote requirements) and 39 (school facilities and 55 percent vote), is scheduled to take place at 4 p.m. on Oct. 25 in the Almaden room of the Student Union.

Play tries to reach students

By Kate Kositch & Trisha Santos

DAILY STAFF WRITERS

Audience members will weep, be angered and laugh at the same time, said sophomore theater arts student Patrice Lakey, referring to "Long Time Since Yesterday," the play that is scheduled to open tonight at the University Theatre.

"You come away thinking that you can never completely know a person," Lakey said. "You never know what's going on inside."

The play, written by African American playwright P.J. Gibson, is about five middle-aged women brought together after their friend commits suicide and they are forced to confront issues of their own.

"These are seasoned women," said director and professor Ethel Pitts Walker about the play's characters. "They're at the height of their lives, and yet they ask themselves 'What have I done?'"

The character who killed herself played it safe and seemed to have it all: career and family. But the one time she took a risk, she suffered consequences that drove her to commit suicide, Walker said.

The play deals with issues such as abandonment, sexual identity, child abuse, low self-esteem, racism and self-hate, Walker said, adding that these issues are ones that women have to tackle every day.

These women are the children of the feminist movement and have more opportunities than their mothers had, yet they do not understand the consequences of their decisions, she said.

"In the larger scheme, people want options, but they never think about the price they have to pay," Walker said. "That is at the heart of the play."

Walker, who has taught theater arts classes for 11 years at SJSU, said she has taught this play for about six years.

"After they got done reading the play, they got so excited by the ending and they would say 'Dr. Walker, you just have to do this play,'" she said about her students prodding her to take it to the stage.

Despite the female ensemble, this is not only a play for women, said Wendi Hodgen, cast member and 1997 SJSU alumna in theater arts.

"It's not a play about menopause, it's about what's going on inside," Hodgen said, adding that it caters to people of different backgrounds, ages and sexual orientations.

Although it has been her dream to direct "Long Time Since Yesterday," Walker said it has been an arduous journey.

"It is such a passionate play, and it has been emotionally draining,"

LONG TIME SINCE YESTERDAY

she said.

College students will be able to relate to this play even though it is about middle-aged women, Walker said.

"Many college-aged students have many choices to make, from what to major in to deciding to skip school and work instead," she said. "The age of the characters should not be a barrier."

"Long Time Since Yesterday" will be presented at 7 p.m. Friday and Saturday and also from Oct. 19 through Oct. 21 in the University Theatre, located on Fifth and San Fernando streets.

Tickets are $6 for students, $10 for general admission and can be purchased at the theater box office or by calling 924-4555. Tickets are also available through BASS and the SJSU Event Center.

CONCERT: Improvisation part of jazz performance of San Jose State University students, as well as teen-agers and a few local musicians.

Reno Brian, a junior majoring in percussion, played the vibes during the concert.

"I think the show was very well played," Brian said. "This concert sounded better than any rehearsal we've ever done. There is another project in the works, but I can't go into details."

Triniece Robinson, a junior majoring in improvised music studies, was the vocalist for the show.

"It's really good to meet all the different musicians," Robinson said. "This concert was amazing. I think it says something about where it's going. It's a good thing for the school."

The stage was set with two pianos, three double basses, three alto saxophones, three tenor saxophones, two baritone saxophones, two trumpets, a flugelhorn, an electric guitar and an assortment of traps, congas, bongos and vibes.

The first song, called "Prayer for the World," sounded like a freight train of jazz music, with Robinson slowly singing, "A prayer for the world, a prayer for every boy and girl."

Suddenly, three dancers also came on stage, performing modern improvisational dance in front of the musicians.

The dancers periodically writhed on the ground, leapt in the air with their arms flailing and gave each other piggyback rides while posing and twisting their bodies.

They would leave the stage to the right and return after a few minutes.

The dancers didn't go over well with the crowd, who began snickering and laughing each time they came back onstage.

African Sunshine was the next song.

This song had an African tribal beat to it, with Robinson slowly singing the lyrics.

Gale would point to musicians, cueing them to stand up and play solos.

"Meditation" and "Deep Journey" were the following songs.

"Meditation" was improvised, and the musicians were free to play whatever they felt like playing.

"Deep Journey" had the same jazz beat with solos from the musicians Gale pointed to.

The first part of the concert ended with "Saxophone Ensemble," in which half of the saxophone players got up while playing their instruments and walked down the stairs to the left and right of the stage and played in front of the first row.

After a 10-minute intermission, 14-year-old John Farley played "Mystical Voyage," a song he wrote, on piano with Paulette Davis.

Farley is Gale's nephew.

"I decided to play with (Gale) during a camping trip," Farley said. "I had a couple of other original compositions, but they weren't as good."

Gale played for the first time in the concert during the next song, "Children of Peace."

While directing, Gale would face the audience and play his trumpet, improvising as the band played.

"Take Time To Feel" was played with Will Nichols on piano, who has been playing with Gale for about 20 years.

This was another mellow, slow jazz song, with Gale playing his trumpet while Nichols and the band played.

"Warm Blue" was a blues song in which band members began to clap with the beat, which in turn got the audience to clap as well.

The last all-improvisational song, "High Tech Theme," had Gale going around to each band member, pointing to them, then waving his arms to tell the band to stop.

For an encore, the band did "Saint Go Marchin' In."

After the concert, Rebecca Golding, a junior majoring in child development, said the show was unlike anything she's ever heard.

"I really liked 'Mystical Voyage,'" Golding said. "This is avant-garde jazz, and it was very different."

Alex Cabello, who attended the concert, said he liked Gale's clothes.

"The music was cool and funky," Cabello said. "But the male dancer had to go. He was distracting."

CHEER: Former cheerleaders take lack of invitation as 'slap in the face' rent cheerleaders should perform together to learn from each other.

"It's good to learn about the past to prepare for the future," Boyd-Winslow said.

Cosentino agreed. "This could be a learning opportunity for them," she said.

Rehm said he offered the alumni cheerleaders the compromise of performing separately from the existing squad.

"They weren't willing to accept the compromise," Rehm said. "Each team would get equal time in front of the crowd."

Boyd-Winslow said there was no proposed compromise until Wednesday.

"The conversation on Monday confirmed that (the alumni cheerleaders) were not allowed to cheer," Boyd-Winslow said.

Boyd-Winslow said she felt the compromise came in reaction to squad members contacting the Spartan Daily.

"They found out on Tuesday night that people had approached the Spartan Daily to voice their displeasure," Boyd-Winslow said. "I got a voicemail Wednesday morning from Michael (Rehm) saying he had come up with a compromise he thought everyone could live with."

Tawanda Johnson, a senior majoring in social work who was on the squad for two years, said she felt the compromise was an effort to calm down the alumni cheerleaders.

"He's trying to cover his butt, basically," Johnson said.

Another reason for his decision to exclude the alumni cheerleaders from the homecoming game, Rehm said, is that they didn't contact him early enough to plan the event.

"I've tried to work with them closely, but they came to me too late in the season," Rehm said.

Ventura said she was told the process to prepare and perform with the current cheerleaders would take too long.

"It's a little frustrating," Boyd-Winslow said. "I don't think it's fair. Inviting alumni back is tradition."

Rehm said he feels it is important to include the alumni and is willing to work with them toward a possible solution.

"I'm still willing to talk to them," Rehm said. "I'm sorry this is an issue. I'm willing to work with the alumni, but it has to be under a different format."

Rehm suggested organizing an event with the alumni at a later date, or in spring for next year's homecoming game.

"This is not a good year for them to cheer together," Rehm said. "It comes down to miscommunication. It was not meant to be taken personally."

Cosentino said she felt the decision would disappoint the alumni who will attend the game, and it might result in hard feelings.

"This type of thing leaves a bitter taste in people's mouths," Cosentino said.

Johnson said she felt insulted by the decision and didn't think a compromise would help so close to the game date.

"Most of us feel the damage is already done," Johnson said. "It was a slap in the face."
