Rally draws more than 100 people to promote peace

By Sarah Grace Ruf
DAILY STAFF WRITER

A peace rally was held in downtown's Cesar Chavez Park on Friday for various communities to show their support in peace efforts, not war, in the Middle East.

One speaker, Yousef Al-Yousef, from American Muslims for Global Peace and Justice, said he thinks war is not necessary.

"Hopefully, we can pass a message that there has to be other ways to stop bombing Afghanistan," he said. "We seek other means of resolving the conflict."

Faten Hijazi, a member of Students for Justice and the Muslim Student Association, said she agrees that war is not the answer.

"I'm here to voice the opinion of a lot of other Americans that have been silenced. What we're doing right now is wrong," she said. "We're returning one wrong action with another wrong action. We're acting on vengeance."

Hijazi added that the approval rating for war that the media is advertising is not as high as the media claims it is.

David Camarillo, another Students for Justice member, agreed that popular media is misrepresenting the public's views.

"I don't remember them asking me," Camarillo said. "They're giving an answer to a question they don't have enough information to answer."

Vanessa Nisperos, a member of Students for Justice who emceed the event, said she wanted people to look at independent media sources for information about our attacks on Afghanistan.

"There's a lot more going on than people know. We want to encourage people to seek other forms of media," she said. "There's still an open space for dialogue."

Rose Placencia, also a member of Students for Justice, added, "We want to help people be able to think for themselves ... maybe the media isn't telling us everything."

According to Nisperos, about 100 people attended the rally.

Santa Clara University, De Anza and SJSU students spoke, as well as representatives from other community organizations. San Jose police officers were present at the hour-and-a-half event, but the rally remained peaceful.

Elena Dorabji, a SJSU political science lecturer, said she attended the rally to see the level of support San Jose citizens have for the peace movement.

"I'm amazed at how brave (the speakers) are because it's not the tone in the United States," Dorabji said. She added that the rally seemed reminiscent of the Vietnam era.

"Everything I worked for in the '70s ... it's back to square one," she said.

Speaker Raj Jayadev from the online magazine, De-Bug, said chance moments, such as this rally, have the opportunity to turn into movements.

He also said people should allow their actions to be dictated by their moral convictions.

Tahir Anwar, a speaker from the South Bay Islamic Association, spoke about God and his role in world peace.

"It's not 'Where is God?' It's 'Where are the good people God created?'" Anwar said.

Roger Wharton, from sjspirit.org, also spoke.

"All religions speak of peace," he said. "We share bread and wine together. We are one earth, one people."

"When one is hurt, we all are hurt."

Wharton also encouraged those in attendance to remember they are the "peacemakers."

Hijazi, from the Muslim Student Association, said America must concentrate on its own internal weaknesses before trying to fight this war.

"I don't think we can win a war

Workshop examines opposite sex

By Todd Hendry
DAILY STAFF WRITER

Cookies were served with milk as some students prepared to discuss gender issues Thursday in the Almaden room of the Student Union in a workshop called "Sex, Milk and Cookies."

The purpose of the workshop was to have men and women understand the gender differences that exist between one another through communication, said Gregory Wolcott, coordinator of New Student Orientation at San Jose State University.

Both genders sat opposite one another, and they were handed a blank piece of paper to write down questions about the opposite sex.

More questions were asked about men than women because women outnumbered the men 7-to-1.

"It was pretty intimidating because there were so many women and just a few guys," said Kevin Lowe, a senior hospitality management major. "I think I would have felt more comfortable if there were more guys around. There were so many women that it was just an overpowering type of feeling."

Going into the discussion,

Vandals turn on sprinklers, damage Scheller House

By Colin Atagi
DAILY STAFF WRITER

The Scheller House, located near the Fourth Street garage, was vandalized between Oct. 5 and the morning of Oct. 6, when someone turned the sprinkler system on, allowing water to leak into the basement.

Garden City Construction foreman Rick Squires said his crew locked up the area surrounding the Scheller House around 6:30 p.m. but arrived at 7 a.m. the next day to find the water valve turned on.

"One of my lead carpenters arrived, heard the water, came over the fence and turned the water off," Squires said. "We went into emergency procedure, the first thing being to get the water turned off."

The water ran into an open trench and then ran through a coring in the foundation, allowing the water to flood the basement, Squires said.

The water flooded to about five feet deep, said Lt. Shannon Maloney of the University Police Department.

There was some damage to the electricity, heating and air conditioning systems, Maloney said.

The electricity system had to be turned off for a while, Squires said, though it is now running.

"We immediately threw the disconnect, so if there was any possibility of electrolysis, we eliminated it right away," he said.

It took a couple days for the construction crew to pump the water out of the basement, Squires said.

They are still making repairs, though the damage was minimal, he said.

The estimated cost of the damage is still being evaluated, Maloney said.

The house was supposed to be turned over to the Associated Students last week, Squires said, but the group won't be able to move in until this week because Greeks compete for best house

Service helps others in dealing with attacks

By Andrew Toy
DAILY STAFF WRITER

A group of more than 30 campus community members gathered Thursday afternoon in the Spartan Memorial for a service that presented different religious views and how to deal with and move on from the events of Sept. 11.

The service was hosted by the Catholic Campus Ministry and titled "One Month to the Day," in memory of the victims of the terrorist attacks.

Melissa Navarro, the student emcee for the service, said she felt that it's a nice surprise to hear the guest speakers come together from different religious backgrounds in the spirit of soliarity. "This is something that we need because we focus so much on the media, on the violence, and the hatred and the negativity," Navarro said. "For once we did something that was good."

For Elizabeth Campisi, the Catholic Campus Ministry's young adults minister, the contrast and similarities between each of the speakers was a good example of the variety and unity that the community has.

"I was really happy with the diversity of students present," Campisi said. "I thought that the event became a celebration of that diversity."

Some students said they

Symbol of support missing on campus

Oh say can you see, the Star Spangled Banner at San Jose State? I can't. In this tenuous time for our nation, our president asked us to do one simple thing to show our support for the victims and families of those who lost their lives Sept. 11: fly the flag.

As a student at SJSU, I wondered where the flag flies at this public institution of higher learning. I decided to take a walk from the Business Tower to Tower Hall in search of this symbol of our national solidarity in this time of crisis. Old Glory was nowhere to be found. I found articles about concerns for Muslim students, notices about peace demonstrations, several fliers about ethnic clubs but not one American flag.

Have we forgotten about America in our quest for political correctness and cultural sensitivity? One of our own alumni, Jason Dahl, was killed in the attack and our university can't fly the flag? This is not Vietnam, and these are not the 1960s. This is not about fighting for some foreign country that most people can't pick out on a map. This is about America's sons and daughters fighting to protect our freedom here at home and to find justice for the thousands of children whose moms and dads never came home on that dark day in September.

Our fellow countrymen are putting their lives on the line to protect us. The least we can do is fly the flag as a show of our support and gratitude.

First Amendment privileges at risk

I read an intriguing article on the back page of the Oct. 10 issue of the Spartan Daily titled, "District decides discipline for teacher who burned flag."

A week after the attack on the United States, a sixth-grade teacher in Sacramento burned an American flag in front of his students, expressing his opinion about this country. Now his job is on the line because he wanted to demonstrate to his students that there is freedom of speech in this country, but he has been proven wrong.

Although Sept. 11 was a tragic event in American history and patriotism has gone up after this tragedy, it doesn't mean that people are not entitled to have an opinion. It is not the first time an individual has burned an American flag to express his or her viewpoint. If we, the American people, keep discriminating and firing whomever has a different point of view then why does the First Amendment exist? Everyone should have the liberty to express his or her beliefs in a civilized manner and should not be reprimanded for it. If we punish people for their belief then what guarantee do we have that we won't be the next person taking the defendant seat?

Explaining U.S. government's role in past military responses

In response to Ted Rudow's Oct. 11 rebuttal, we must be clear that the government of the United States is not the government of George Orwell's "1984." That was mainly a criticism of the Nazis and of Socialist states. It was also a serious warning to the United States and its allies of what to be careful of. It was a warning heeded.

Despite the media's many faults, it is indeed the watchdog of our government and not its tool. Because of this, we enjoy the most trustworthy teaching of history, and history, as well as the media, is not always complimentary of the United States.

That said, Rudow states that Britain and the United States entered both world wars because Germany and Japan were "outselling" us on the economic front. World War I is a complicated story in itself, but the main reason it grew was due to secret alliances. In fact, nations like Britain dragged their feet into that war.

What about World War II? It's very simple. The United States went to war against Japan because of the bombing of Pearl Harbor. Whatever conspiracy theorists may tell you, the match that lit the fuse was the aggression of the then-imperialistic Japan.

As for Germany and World War II: Yes, the country was in poverty. Yes, it was much due to the unfair Treaty of Versailles, but none of this validates Hitler and the horrors he committed. It was right for the United States to enter that war. There is no gray area.

Furthermore, Rudow enjoys quoting from the Bible. To say that God never condones war is one thing. Using the Bible to validate such a claim is another. Let's not forget that Moses was a general, as was King David. Even Jesus is not the total pacifist (Matthew 21:12). Finally, there's that famous passage from Ecclesiastes 3:1-8, "There is an appointed time for everything ... A time of war, and a time of peace." There is such a thing as a "just" war. We are in one.

D.S. PEREZ

BORN UNDER A BAD SIGN

the governor and his lackey, towing a child's wagon filled with pamphlets as he knocked on doors.

After following the three politicians for a few blocks, in which they knocked on a total of four doors in a large cul-de-sac, I interviewed the bloke again. He was going off on how successful his campaign was.

"Successful? You only knocked on four doors, the same ones your opponent did," I pointed out. (I'll admit that I refrained from the information I got from the house owners, saying they were freaked out by this guy, one even calling him "an asshole.")

He replied on how cynical the media was, I must be a liberal (I'm not), and who knows what. He asked me what would impress me. I told him to get his red wagon filled with papers to another four doors and start knocking again.

Sigh. Politicians. Of all people, I wish they were honest. Imagine our diplomacy with Afghanistan.

Taliban: Yeah, we got Osama, and we appreciate his company and condone his actions. What do you want?

United States: We want to bring the bastard to justice or blow him to kingdom come — and you're in the way.

Taliban: Go away or die.

United States: Same to you, buddy.

Unfortunately, it's not that simple.

Knowing that diplomacy is sometimes required in everyday communication, I also believe in backhanded compliments. Those balance everything out. Truth with a pinch of niceties. A pinch.

"I don't like to wear make-up," an ex once told me.

"That's OK. You look better without it. You tend use too much white on the cheeks, and the red lipstick clashes with your skin tone. You end up looking like a circus clown."

I can honestly say that person wasn't in my life much longer.

I was told I really know how to talk to women. I have never understood women; I guess they enjoy living in an illusion.

Another girl in junior high told everyone she was the most respectable person in class.

"I am a fair and just person," this girl said.

"Actually, you're quite bossy and whiny," I replied.

I later complimented her on her right hook.

People are really sensitive to appearance honesty. It's the first impression anyone gets from anyone. And usually, I see past the illusions and see the flat truth.

There was this seventh-grade teacher I had. I was honest with this aging flower child who had to deal with a class of 40 brats five days a week.

"Mrs. X, I really think you need a vacation," I said.

"And why do you say that, Don?" she asked.

"Because at the end of the day, you look 65. Those bags under your eyes really tell the tale of stress. Go home. Relax. Stay there."

She was insulted, but she did follow the advice. I think it could have averted heart problems or Prozac in her future. The rest of the class gave me props for bringing in a substitute for a few days too.

Polite? Not really.

But do you want to walk around campus looking like crap and oblivious to the fact?

Didn't think so.

And besides, I'm being honest. I'm not lying to you.

So when you tell me, "I can't believe you said that!" Well, I meant it.

Battling college fatigue, asking for time to reflect

It's funny the way things work out. For someone who is starting her career in journalism, where observation, exploration and focus are learned until they become second nature, I sure am distracted.

It wasn't even like these qualities were hard to adopt, either. Since a young age, I was aware that details were significant. In fact, I loved to dissect situations; I loved to analyze.

And I still do. But somewhere within the past year, this knack for detail and dissection has deteriorated, and now I'm merely an unfocused ball of energy.

Last week, my cousin's friend came to visit me in the newsroom. And I, being the one my cousin entrusted to report back and convey everything about him, regarded this as a simple task.

Easy. No problem. He was a nice guy, and we talked for about 10 minutes, which presented enough time to scrutinize him and decide whether I'd allow him to infiltrate my close-knit family.

But it turns out there was a problem, a very big problem. Practically everything I remembered about his appearance was wrong, and as a result, I'm sure he now thinks I'm insane.

To say the least, the incident has given me an unbelievable amount of stress.

I don't know if I've become too preoccupied.

I don't know if I can trust myself.

I don't know if I'm going crazy.

I do know that I feel like I live in the world of go, and I'm completely submerged in the sea of deadlines.

I don't have breakfast because I have to get to class, which starts in 15 minutes.

I can't sit and chat with a friend in a crisis because I must attend a meeting with my professor. I won't listen to lecture longer than three minutes at a time because ... well, because I just can't.

When did paying attention become so difficult?

Elaborating on the topic, I humored myself the other day.

Someone had left a stress management CD next to my computer a while back. With the title "Relaxation Experience" and an illustration of a serene body of water on the disc, I thought it must be a sign from God, who was telling me to slow down and take a breath. So, I popped the CD into the computer and listened through my headphones.

MINAL GANDHI

UNRAVEL

Let me just say, in the process of acquiring inner peace there sure are a whole lot of directions to follow. I couldn't believe it would take so much concentration. That relaxation session ended fairly quickly, to put it simply.

Now I'm on the quest to unravel the not-so-mysterious mystery of slowing down.

I've grown weary of this world of go. I will not drown in the sea of deadlines. I'm determined to get out. Not just for myself, either, because I see countless others suffering from similar predicaments.

If I don't slow down, if I don't focus, I'm going to miss the point.

Yes, I want to earn my college degree, and I want to find a job that will make me happy, but none of these goals will be worth the effort if I neglect everything that brings me to those points in life.

I'd hate to look back on my education and regard it as a joke if it turns out I know a theory yet don't understand the reasons behind it.

I'll be hurt if I have many friends but not anyone who knows me inside and out.

Most importantly, I won't care if I have everything in the world, because it would mean nothing if I can't remain healthy enough to enjoy it.

Staying focused, no matter how grueling it is for some of us, is essential. The goal should be to focus on ourselves and the things or people we care about.

After all, there's not as much beauty in a rose unless we stop and smell it. There isn't much splendor in a song unless we hush and listen to its words. There isn't much marvel in life unless we feel well enough to live it.

A need to face changes with humor and strength

If any one of us had the power to turn back time, believe me, we would. The Sept. 11 tragedy in New York would never have happened, and people would be living their normal lives.

There is one problem. No one has the power to do such a thing that can break the space-time continuum and travel backward. I know technology has been through dramatic changes over the decades, but we're not that advanced.

Now back to reality. We have to face the facts and continue to live on.

Emily B. Zurich wrote a great column, "Protecting one's sanity from TV 'perma-news,'" Tuesday about some mind pleasers that can get you away from being too carried away with the terrorist attack news. It is an informative piece that explains her four rules of sanity.

Hilarious as the column may be, we need to follow it. We need to try to continue with our lives and can't let an incident like this make us weaker. As Americans, problems that make us fall will only make us stronger. Never show your weaknesses to your opponent; make them pee in their pants by showing them our friendly hydrogen bomb.

Commitments continue to be based on traditional values

Just a slight clarification to the excellent article written by Christina Lucarotti on dating and courtship ("By dating in a more open, social atmosphere, one can find if their current date is 'the one,'" published Oct. 3).

Like most of us, the writer accepts the often repeated claim that 50 percent of all marriages end in divorce. This can be a bit misleading since the statistic includes repeated and/or multiple failures such as Liz Taylor and her eight attempts at marital bliss.

In fact, 75 percent of all first marriages do not end in divorce.

Consequently, we do not need to be quite so pessimistic about our chances for a life-long commitment.

Regardless of statistics, however, what is really true is that our current dating patterns, in many instances, do not lead to a realistic knowledge of the other person. Whether we return to courtship or some other alternative, we need to reaffirm the basis of any solid relationship: love, respect, compatibility of values and a willingness to compromise.

Bush rebuffs Taliban offer on bin Laden as 'non-negotiable'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush sternly rejected a Taliban offer to discuss handing over Osama bin Laden to a third country as U.S. jets began a second week of bombing.

"They must have not heard. There's no negotiations," the president said Sunday.

The number of people exposed to anthrax grew to 12 with the addition of a police officer and two lab technicians in New York. Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson declared that attempts to transmit the deadly bacteria through the mail "is an act of terrorism."

However, officials said they still do not have evidence linking the anthrax outbreaks in Florida and New York to terrorists.

"We should consider this potential that it is linked," Attorney General John Ashcroft said on NBC's "Meet the Press." "It is premature at this time to decide whether there is a direct link."

National security adviser Condoleezza Rice sought to quell fears that the terrorists may have crude nuclear weapons. A defense official said last week that if the terrorists have obtained any nuclear material, they may be able to make a weapon that could spread radiation without an actual destructive explosion.

"We have no credible evidence at this point of a specific threat of that kind," Rice said on CBS's "60 Minutes."

Bush Cabinet members mobilized at home and abroad Sunday.

Ashcroft said investigators are looking to question about 190 people who may have knowledge of terrorism. Secretary of State Colin Powell left for a high-priority diplomatic mission to Pakistan and India aimed at keeping tensions between those nations from further complicating the military campaign in neighboring Afghanistan.

Returning to the White House after a weekend at the Camp David retreat, Bush reiterated four clear conditions the Taliban must meet before bombing will be stopped.

"All they got to do is turn him (bin Laden) over, and his colleagues and the thugs he hides, as well as destroy his camps and (release) the innocent people being held hostage in Afghanistan," Bush said.

The latter was an apparent reference to eight foreign aid workers imprisoned in Afghanistan.

The administration had avoided calling them "hostages." In his speech to a joint session of Congress on Sept. 20, Bush said they had been "unjustly imprisoned."

A White House spokeswoman said she believed it was the first time Bush had publicly used the word "hostage."

Bush said there would be no negotiations even as a Taliban leader suggested the Afghan government would be willing to discuss surrendering bin Laden to a third country if the United States provided evidence of his guilt and stopped bombing.

"There's no need to discuss innocence or guilt," Bush said. "We know he's guilty."

Overseas, a U.S. military official said the bombing of Afghanistan has entered a "cleanup mode."

U.S. warplanes have destroyed nearly all of the targets originally assigned to them, including militant training camps and weapons storage areas, the captain of the USS Enterprise aircraft carrier said Sunday.

His identity could not be disclosed under military rules for covering the operation.

The new strikes destroyed Kabul's international telephone exchange, severing one of the last means of communication with the outside world.

Bush ignored a reporter's question about whether he wants to install a new government if the Taliban falls. Rice sought to strike a delicate balance on the issue.

"America cannot choose the future government of Afghanistan. Only the Afghan people can choose the future government of Afghanistan," she said.

But, she added, "We have no reason to leave an Afghanistan that its neighbors have to fear for instability."

Earlier Sunday, a spokesman for the Taliban

Embassy in Pakistan said that sending bin Laden to the United States for a trial would be "a joke" and that it was a mistake for U.S. officials to focus narrowly on him when other terrorists are in a position to strike.

Ashcroft dismissed the explanation as propaganda, and addressed a fresh round of terrorist threats against Americans and world leaders by bin Laden supporters.

On the legal front, Ashcroft asked Americans to remain vigilant for signs of another terrorist attack as "a preparedness, not a paralysis, not a panic."

Thompson raised the possibility that the anthrax was being spread by a domestic source.

"It could be somebody holding a grudge," or "a copycat kind of situation," he said on "Fox News Sunday."

Thompson also sought to reassure Americans the government was strengthening its response against any bioterrorist threats.

ist threats.

There are more than 2 million doses of medication to treat 2 million people for 60 days for exposure to anthrax.

The government has thousands of medical professionals on alert and tons of medical supplies, ready to go where needed, Thompson said.

The administration announced that it would ask

Congress for more than $1.5 billion to purchase additional antibiotics and take other steps to counter bioterrorism threats.

In New York, a police officer and two lab technicians involved in detecting the case of anthrax in an NBC employee are being treated with antibiotics for exposure to the bacteria, Mayor Rudolph Giuliani disclosed.

In Nevada, health officials said four people who may have come into contact with a contaminated letter sent to a Microsoft office tested negative for anthrax.

Five employees and one family member are believed to have been exposed to the letter.

SJSU sweeps Wolf Pack

By Karlie Reiss

DAILY STAFF WRITER

The Spartan women's volleyball team strutted into second place in the Western Athletic Conference after defeating the University of Nevada 3-0 Saturday at the Event Center.

The Wolf Pack entered the match having just lost to Fresno State University on Friday. Spartan head coach Craig Choate said the scenario was quite familiar.

"Nevada started the season strong last year as well and was the team to beat," Choate said. "We beat them last year, and then they traveled to Fresno and lost that match, back-to-back."

San Jose State University was determined to win this match, said junior middle blocker Stephanie Pascucci, who had 14 kills and four blocks in the victory.

"There were two things that we could see from Nevada," Pascucci said. "Either they would come back harder from their loss to Fresno, or they would roll over and die."

The Spartans came out strong in the first game with a 6-2 lead. They never trailed Nevada and took the game 30-25.

Spartan junior outside hitter Christina Lukens said she believed a high hitting percentage throughout the three games was one of the reasons her team won. SJSU finished the match with a hitting percentage of .391.

"We knew that in a game where the competition is good, the win would come down to the team with the best swings, the best passes and the team who served aggressively," Lukens said.

The second game was a display of continuous rallies, which resulted in a tight score throughout. The back-and-forth affair produced 15 ties. The final kill by sophomore Liz Hudson ended the game at 30-28.

"Rallies are huge for the team's momentum. It gets the crowd into the game, and when we win the rallies, it gets the team up," Lukens added.

SJSU focused on digging the hole for the Wolf Pack from the start of Game 3.

"With the level that Nevada is at, we knew that we could not let up in the third game," Choate said. "Our mantra is: we dig a hole for a team, and they have to find a way out."

The Wolf Pack refused to give up and tied the final game at 9-9, but couldn't pull any closer. The Spartans then went on a 10-1 run and left Nevada wondering where its chance had gone.

"The third game was fun to come out strong and watch Nevada's faces drop," Pascucci said.

Brianna Blair went on a swinging frenzy to end the game, having three consecutive kills and 18 kills in the entire match.

SJSU is scheduled to play the University of Hawai'i at 7 p.m. on Thursday at the Event Center.

The Rainbow Wahine are sitting in first place in the WAC.

"Next week is a big week for us and this was a good start," Hudson said. "Winning definitely prepares you mentally."

Garcia, Owens push 49ers to 37-31 OT win

ATLANTA (AP) — Jeff Garcia threw his third touchdown pass of the game to Terrell Owens, a 52-yarder with 6:16 left in overtime Sunday, to give the San Francisco 49ers a 37-31 victory over the Atlanta Falcons.

San Francisco (4-1), rallying from an early 14-0 hole, tied the score at 31 when Garcia hooked up with Owens on a 17-yard touchdown with 17 seconds left in regulation.

The Falcons (2-3) caught a break in overtime when the Niners drove to Atlanta's 16 on their first possession, only to have Garcia fumble a snap.

Atlanta couldn't take advantage, going three-and-out to give Garcia another chance. He quickly redeemed himself.

On third-and-5 at the San Francisco 48, Owens slipped behind Falcons cornerback Ray Buchanan to haul in the pass, broke a tackle and high-stepped into the end zone for the winning touchdown.

The Rocket is set to take off after Yanks clobber A's, 9-2

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Roger Clemens got off a plane just in time to find out he'll have a job to do Monday night.

The New York Yankees turned the improbable into the inevitable, wrapping up a two-game weekend sweep in Oakland on Sunday to force a decisive Game 5 in their AL division series.

It had seemed extremely unlikely Clemens would get another chance to pitch in 2001. He left Game 1 with a tight hamstring, and the Yankees lost the first two games at home to face elimination and the end of their three-year reign as World Series champions.

But New York won both games in Oakland, where the Athletics had won 17 straight entering the playoffs, to ensure a trip home for Game 5 on Monday night.

And Clemens has healed sufficiently — though far from 100 percent — to pitch again.

So Clemens worked out Sunday morning, then got on a commercial jet bound for New York before Game 4 began.

The Yankees' 9-2 win Sunday meant Clemens' changed itinerary was not in vain.

"He felt good today off the mound. So I feel good that he'll physically be able to do it tomorrow," Yankees manager Joe Torre said before Sunday's game. "Sure, he's probably not as good as if it never happened. ... I'd say probably in the area of 70, 80 percent, that may be a good guess."

Torre said Clemens practiced pickoffs and fielding bunts Sunday, and that one of his biggest concerns is that the right-hander not get too psyched up before the start.

"We'll see what he looks like. If I'm not comfortable watching what we see, then we'll make a switch," Torre said after Sunday's game. "He is self motivated, there's no question. He's higher than a kite every time he goes out there, because he's done this his whole career."

"I think the only danger with him, the physical part aside, is not to get too high and too pumped up, because he has a tendency to get a little wild."

The A's expected starter for Game 5, Mark Mulder, stayed behind in Oakland for what he hoped would be a team celebration.

Instead, he watched from the edge of the dugout as the Yankees evened up the series.

Mulder wasn't talking after Sunday's game, but his teammates said they're confident he'll hold his own in the matchup with Clemens.

"It's Rocket versus Mulder, two hot pitchers," A's designated hitter Jeremy Giambi said. "They're both going to be tough."

The A's will go to New York without one of their key offensive players. Right fielder Jermaine Dye broke his left shin when he fouled a ball into his leg in the third inning Sunday. Dye joined the A's in a July trade from Kansas City.

"We won a few games this year when he wasn't here, so we're going to have to find a way to get it done," A's manager Art Howe said.

Even though the Yankees now have momentum on their side, and a future Hall of Famer scheduled to start for them Monday night, the A's still have a bit of history going for them — in 11 previous postseason series that they've held a 2-1 lead, they've gone on to win all 11 times.

Last year, it was the Yankees who lost Game 4 at home before flying across the country to beat Oakland in Game 5 on the road.

"It's nice to be on a high going home, winning two in a row," Torre said. "But we certainly know that this thing isn't over."

SAN JOSE STATE UNIVERSITY

SPARTAN DAILY

Homecoming no cure for Spartans' winless ways

By Mike Osegueda

DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

You know things are getting ugly when the head coach throws up after the game.

Make no mistake about it, that's what the Spartan football team's 24-17 loss to Southern Methodist University was — ugly.

While San Jose State University was trying to digest what had just happened, how the Spartans had become 0-5, head coach Fitz Hill just couldn't.

He vomited. "It didn't rest well with me," the first-year head coach said.

Again, he was haunted by the same demon that has troubled his team all season: turnovers.

"It baffles me," Hill said. "I think I need to go to a psychologist."

With the scored tied at 14-14 in the third quarter, the Spartans (0-2 in the Western Athletic Conference) were moving the ball well until tailback Deonce Whitaker fumbled and the ball was scooped up by the Mustangs.

That play drained the life out of the Spartans.

"The fumble killed all our momentum on the field," Hill said. "I feel like that has been the story of my life this year. I know that I've talked about turnovers since day one. That seems to be the biggest thorn in my side as a head football coach."

Meanwhile, SMU (1-4, 1-2 in the WAC) moved the ball on the ground with ease against the Spartans' defense.

Freshman ShanDerrick Charles looked like some other famous Mustangs, such as Eric Dickerson and Doak Walker, as he brutalized the SJSU defense for 243 yards in 23 carries.

"I know all those guys," Charles said. "I've watched films of them and imagined running with them."

With only one college carry to his credit, Charles looked beyond his 19 years of age on the field.

Hill said the Spartans gave Charles a lot of help.

"Right now we can't stop anything defensively," Hill said. "We made him effective; we just didn't tackle."

Early in the game, Charles wasn't causing as many problems. In fact, the Spartans got on the board first, marking the first time SJSU has held a lead this season.

After being kept out a series in favor of backup quarterback Clint Carlson, Marcus Arroyo responded by leading the Spartans to the most efficient drive of the afternoon.

Arroyo needed just five plays before he connected with wide receiver Edell Shepherd for a 40-yard touchdown pass in the second quarter.

On the Spartans' next possession, Nick Gilliam attempted a 52-yard field goal that was blocked and returned 50 yards by SMU's Jonas Rutledge for a touchdown.

Then Charles took control. He carried the ball four of seven times on the SMU drive, with runs of 18 and 39 yards, as SMU put another touchdown on the board to go up 14-7.

The Spartans responded in the final seconds of the first half, when Arroyo drove the team to the goal line and had a fourth-down-and-goal situation on his hands.

When the play began, everybody went to the left except tight end George Campos, who Arroyo hit in the end zone from two yards out, tying the game at 14-14.

After the third quarter fumble by Whitaker, things went down the drain.

SMU added a field goal in the third quarter and a touchdown to start the fourth quarter.

The Spartans' offense only managed to score three points in the second half, a 29-yard field goal from Gilliam with a little more than five minutes left in the game.

"Right now I don't think it's as much as much a physical demise as it is a mental demise," Hill said.

Still, Hill is in unfamiliar territory. He's winless in five games.

"I've never been 0-5," Hill said. "I feel like I'm at war, in uncharted territory. But we're not waving the white flag, I promise you that."

Hill joined an elite class, albeit one he probably doesn't want to be in, of head coaches to go 0-5 at SJSU.

Dave Baldwin (1997) and John Ralston (1993) both were 0-5 in their first years directing the Spartans.

Staring at the zero in the win column hurts the players just as much as Hill.

"I've never been 0-5 in my life," said Whitaker, who had 102 yards in 25 carries. "And I don't think anyone on this team has been."

Where the Spartans go from here isn't certain. Hill said he would examine the game tape in hopes of finding something positive from this game.

Nonetheless, the team's goal, the one that everyone has been repeating since day one — winning the WAC championship — seems to be disappearing.

"It's gonna be hard at 0-5," said defensive tackle Larry Dawson. "It's gonna be hard to go to practice because it's gonna seem we're not competing for anything."

George Campos celebrates after scoring on a two-yard touchdown pass from Marcus Arroyo during the second quarter of Saturday's game. The Spartans fell to Southern Methodist University 24-17.

After a week of speculation, Carlson remains the backup

By Chris Giovannetti

DAILY STAFF WRITER

With 3:31 remaining in the third quarter during the San Jose State University football game against Southern Methodist University on Saturday, a chant by fans in the home side stands at Spartan Stadium began.

"Put in Clint."

"Put in Clint."

The call was for SJSU backup quarterback Clint Carlson to replace starter Marcus Arroyo.

Carlson came under speculation in the week prior to the game when head coach Fitz Hill mentioned that Carlson could receive significant playing time against the Mustangs.

However, when the game ended, Carlson participated on one drive to some fans' dismay.

"It's a hard question to answer," Carlson said when asked if he received a fair shot. "Probably not, but I trust my coaches judgment. I thought I would get more playing time though."

Arroyo, on the other hand, led a frustrated Spartan offense that held leads of 7-0 and 14-7 on the afternoon before succumbing in the second half.

Despite two touchdown passes, including a 40-yard strike to Edell Shepard in the second quarter, Arroyo completed 6-of-17 passes for 94 yards in the first half.

In the second half, the junior signal caller was 3-for-8 with 39 passing yards.

Arroyo declined to comment on any questions regarding playing time or the quarterback position.

Hill, who vomited after the game, said he had been disgusted with the way things have been going.

"I'm not pleased with what I've seen," he said.

An Arroyo-led offense accumulated just 28 yards on the first two drives of the game.

That's when Hill gave Carlson the signal to warm up.

On his first play, Carlson botched a handoff to tailback Deonce Whitaker, who fumbled the ball out of bounds.

After his suspect start, Carlson then took the Spartans from their own 25-yard line to the Mustang 38 before turning the ball over on downs.

"I was paranoid all day about turnovers," said Hill, whose Spartans rank last among the 10 Western Athletic Conference teams in turnover ratio. "When Clint put it too high in Deonce's hands, I didn't feel comfortable. Right now, I'm just thinking of protecting the ball."

Carlson said he understood Hill's reasoning for removing him.

"I understand (Hill) not wanting me to turn over the ball," Carlson said. "If that was his reasoning for not playing me more, I understand. I'm not going to bad mouth my coaches. I'm just going to tip my hat to them and support them."

Despite being sporadic in the first half, Arroyo was effective in keeping the Spartans in the game.

That was, until, SJSU opted to put the ball on the ground more in the second half, a move that would prove fatal.

With the Spartans surging late in the third quarter, Mustang linebacker D.D. Lee forced Whitaker to fumble the ball at the SMU 24-yard line.

"I blame myself for the fumble. I was driving for more yards and (the ball) popped out," said Whitaker, who finished the day with 102 yards rushing, marking his second 100-yard game of the season.

"That fumble killed our momentum on that drive," Hill said. "Turnovers — it feels like the story of my life."

The Mustangs went on to score

10 points in the next seven-and-a-half minutes.

The Spartans could muster just 60 yards in the final 20 minutes of the contest.

For the game, SJSU converted just 7-of-13 third-down opportunities.

"I don't care who is in the game (Arroyo or Carlson) as long as we move the ball," Whitaker said.

Carlson concurred. "I've always been taught that the sum of the parts is greater than any one part," Carlson said. "I'm just a part."

GREEKS: Competed with other houses to win a trophy

Spartan spirit, a football theme ("Corral the Mustangs" in particular) and the names of the chapters involved, Calderon said.

Junior Nick Winslow commented on the decorations of the Sigma Pi fraternity.

Winslow said the students of Sigma Pi spent all week and most of Thursday night working on their decorations only to have strong winds topple down all their work the next morning, he said.

"We worked all last night and this morning the wind knocked it all down," Winslow said. "Now our house is full of staples."

The second house, Alpha Phi, had a saloon theme in front of the house. Jessie, the cowgirl from Toy Story 2, was the decoration on top of the car, Calderon said.

Junior Rachel Greathouse said the team brainstormed together about the theme it had chosen.

"We wanted to do something with a Mustang and the saloon idea was at the last minute," Greathouse said.

The Alpha Phi house made a fake mustang, or horse, that looked like it was corralled.

"See the Mustang? He's running away from the Spartans," Greathouse said.

The third house, Kappa Delta, was complete with hay in the front yard and a horse mascot decorated on their truck.

Senior Holly Wolk said the house decorations took one day to finish.

"It was a fun, bonding experience," Wolk said. "And it was also a morale booster."

Students from the Kappa Delta sorority agreed that it was a lot of work but all in true Spartan spirit.

"It's the most we've ever done," said Robyn Janitz of the Kappa Delta house. "The pride of San Jose State University is coming out."

Beta Theta Pi, the fourth house, was complete with a student dressed in a mustang costume and a helmet on top of a truck.

The mustang costume, according to Barbie Pemberton, who made it, said it took three hours to make and another three-and-a-half hours to make the headpiece.

Sigma Chi was the final house to be judged and had a Spartan sitting on a throne overlooking a football field. The throne was actually an armchair.

"It's more of an abstract artwork," said senior Joe Lombardo. "We were going to make a horse with the truck, but it didn't work out."

The truck, covered in streamers, carried Josh Melander, who was dressed as a Spartan and was the same one who sat on the throne, Lombardo said.

"The wind knocked down our gold post," Lombardo said.

According to Calderon, who tallied the scores for the judges, the first place winner was the Kappa Delta house that had a theme that included the hay in the front yard and the horse on the truck.

"Beta Theta Pi came behind by 20 points at second place," Calderon said. "The Mustang costume was a great idea, but no persons are allowed to ride on the float."

Calderon added that the house and car decoration contest was the final event for

Greek week, in which all the chapters competed to win the "Greek Week Champions" trophy.

of the vandalism.

"We were planning on moving things in on Monday but can't until next Wednesday," said Alfonso De Alba, executive director for A.S.

The elevator in the building is currently not working and A.S. will continue to hold meetings in the Student Union until it is fixed, De Alba said.

"(The damaged elevator) could probably delay accessibility to the second floor (for disabled students) for public meetings," he said.

A.S. is taking minimal action, though, De Alba said, and is leaving the investigation to the U.P.D.

Some students expressed concern about the vandalism.

"I think that's horrible because it was supposed to be the new home for the Associated body," said Stephen Pettit, a sophomore majoring in industrial technology. "Why would somebody do something to harm campus? I don't think it was a student, but just somebody who came from off campus. It's a shame that it happened."

Jeff Herzstein, a sophomore majoring in meteorology, said he does not think it was a student either.

"I don't personally think a student would do that," he said. "The campus is open. My opinion is somebody came on campus, but I don't know why anyone would do that."

At the last A.S. board meeting, it was suggested that the reward for any information be raised from $1,000 to a higher amount, De Alba said.

Squires said he has been paying a lot of attention to the security of the building and said he thinks the person responsible had to jump over the fence in order to get to the water valve.

"I triple-checked the house before we left Friday," he said. "We made a walk Saturday morning after finding it and none of the gates had been violated so whoever it was came over the top."

"It's a shame something like this has to happen," Squires said. "This is a 150-year-old house ... and it's a shame seeing somebody do this, even if it was a prank or an accident. It's a shame that people can't obey the rules."

Squires said he would like anyone who saw anything suspicious to contact the UPD at 924-2222.

FBI discounts report that Disneyland was possible terrorist target

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The FBI is discounting reports that Disneyland and Walt Disney World in Orlando, Fla. were among possible targets canvassed by terrorists linked to Osama bin Laden.

"There are numerous stories in the media about terrorists targeting Walt Disney World or Disneyland. The FBI is not aware of any specific or credible threat against theme parks," the bureau said in a statement.

"If we or any other agency had specific threat information, we would immediately notify the intended target and the potentially affected public."

Published reports in newspapers this weekend said terrorist groups studied at least five sites for possible attacks in the United States, including Disneyland and Walt Disney World, the Sears Tower in Chicago, the Mall of America in Minnesota and unspecified sports complexes. The reports cited two senior Bush administration officials speaking on condition of anonymity about internal government reports.

The published reports said there was no evidence that attacks were planned on any of the buildings or theme parks.

Representatives of the buildings and theme parks said they had no reason to think their facilities were targeted. Disneyland has "not received anything from the FBI" about a threat, said spokesman Ray Gomez in Anaheim.

attended to feel a part of the community and to contribute in some way to the victims of the attacks.

Hien Huynh, a senior business management major, said he felt he could feel closer to those affected in New York by attending the service.

"Since we're so far away from the East Coast, I try to come to this kind of event to contribute something," he said. "It's feeling support of coming together and feeling a sense of solidarity."

Roger Wharton, the chaplain of sjspirit.org, was one of five speakers at the service who spoke about the presence of God in relation to the terrorist attacks.

"God is part of what's going on in the world," Wharton said. "We ask, 'How can God allow these things to happen?' God was with the people as it was happening."

Wharton spoke about the stories of how people were not in the World Trade Center or on any of the airplanes because they were late for appointments or missed flights.

"All these kinds of things you can say are maybe coincidences, but maybe it's God's active hand in the world today," Wharton said.

He also suggested people remember the existence of nature.

"There is an importance of going for nature for healing and rejuvenation," Wharton said. "It's always available there and a reminder of God's love, creativity and diversity."

Another guest speaker, Rimi Khan, from the SJSU Muslim Student Organization, spoke about how the terrorist attacks brought people together and tore others apart. She made the point that the Muslim American community was affected by the events as well.

Khan said the Muslim society condemns the terrorist attacks and how in Islam, those who are responsible for these violent acts should be sent to hell.

David Goodman, from the SJSU Jewish Student Union, made the point to use forgiveness to initiate a renewal within oneself.

The service also included music performed by pianist, Jon Manongo and vocals by Elizabeth Campisi.

Huynh said he felt all the speakers had important views as to how people can cope with the tragedy.

"I think most of them were saying that it starts with us," Huynh said. "It starts with oneself before we can branch out to the bigger picture."

Campisi said she came away with the feeling of needing to look at herself.

"I was inspired to change myself and open myself to the diversity around," she said. "I was really informed. I didn't realize how much I didn't know about the different perspectives."

For Wharton, he said he hopes that those in attendance would be able to leave with the assurance that they're a part of a community.

"Hopefully, people left with some inspiration to rededicate themselves to peace and justice issues," he said.

Navarro also agreed with the notion that people may have left with a peaceful resolution. She said it was not just about what is inside people's hearts, but it is also what they tell other people about how they feel inside. She said she felt it was important to share one's thoughts "with those that are different from you."

"To the world, you might just be one person, but to one person, you just might be the world," Navarro said. "You have to start within yourself to share that with other people. Something that you think or say or do can affect a hundred people, and even if it affects one person that makes all the difference."
