Striving for an UNDERSTANDING
of jihad

By Colin Arati

Though the guest speaker for the Muslim Student Association's presentation on the meaning of jihad was not able to attend Tuesday, students still learned about members of the association and its objectives.

A forum was set up instead of the originally planned presentation because Hatim Bazian, the guest speaker, could not participate because of a family situation, said Mohammed Naman, vice president of the association. The presentation will be rescheduled, Naman said.

"It's about getting people to realize that there is a history of jihad," he said. "It's not just a word. It's a way of life."

Neman said the results of the forum as a way to prepare for the actual presentation. "It's available there right now," he said. "That's the sort of experience they need."

SJSU students connected to library through e-books

Libraries in San Jose, including SJSU, have joined the information superhighway by implementing e-book technology, said Librarian Reference librarian Sue Kendall.

"We wanted to bring new technology to the library," she said. "It's available there right now, when you need it," he said. "That's the sort of experience they rarely are able to get in class."

SJSU has been in the newspaper readerhip program since 2000, which is distributed to members of the student body.

Neyers said the free newspapers are an incentive for students to be more up-to-date with current issues, because they're free. "It's nice that it's free and it's convenient, because in the dorm rooms people can't check out books and it's difficult for them to know what's going on," he said.

Kendall said there are various features of e-books such as being able to zoom in and page. "They are primarily used for reference work," she said. "They are an additional option of books, just like paper books are for reading."

According to Lorraine Oback, students can surf the Web and find information in books that cannot be found in print. "They are a way to present information in a different way," she said.

She also said encyclopedias, college catalogs and test preparations are available. ""There are so many features of e-books such as being able to zoom in and page," she said. "They are primarily used for reference work," she said. "They are an additional option of books, just like paper books are for reading."

A reader wrote to me after last year's letter column and said it was "a waste of space, time and energy." He was afraid to write something intellectual. He had expected to see something more intellectual. Yeah, and the students of this univ-

Conspiracy theories often follow in the wake of disasters, and Benet Bonet has presented this one again. His confusion about the world is so great that he has to imagine something more horrific than even the most monstrous manipulating events from a darkened room in some secret bunker.

Judo club pins down six medals

Hot start has members optimistic for tournament
this weekend in Montreal

By Tiffani Analla

Last season, the only judo club member to win a medal from the U.S. Open was Ben-cosme, who came fifth in the 81-kilogram weight class.

This year the judo club started off with five medals. Six Spartans returned home with Six medals. The San Jose State University judo team didn’t come home empty handed, as a total of six medals was picked up this season.

Hatano also said he expects more of the team to return with medals in the Benito Juarez Tournament, which is expected to take place in the fall.

Assistant coach Dan Hatano said the judo club members were more dedicated to the sport than past years.

"The results are a good testing ground for the players here," Hatano said. "It instills in the players confidence and instills into the players."

Bencosme said he was proud of his players.

"I don’t care if they win or not. The fact that they were out there representing the university, you know, and I mean that both in the physical sense and the fact that they were fighting in the finals
and lost, doesn’t mean we suck," Bencosme said. "It’s still very good, it’s a reflection of what the coaches expect and what the coaches think of the team’s success in the tournament is a reflection of what the coaches expect.
