Works Libraries

[From Gas Age, July 15, 1915.]

The man who has successfully depended upon his native wit to further his interests is much inclined to despise the aid of books, not because of what they contain, but rather from his experience with bookish, impractical men. In this he makes a big mistake. We do not forego cards because there are card sharps nor despise music because there may be some otherwise imbecile musical cranks among our acquaintances. Let us be fair about books. They are the expression of thought and experience; because much unprofitable trash has been published does not in the least detract from appreciation by the discriminating mind. Those who have made friends with books and enjoyed or profited by the association have a tale to unfold of wonders of the mind, philosophic insight and wealth of helpful fact that the so-called practical brain dreams not of.

Certain minds deal with present actualities through choice and others because no other field has been opened up to them. Their car may need a tire, the front door knob should have been polished, it is desirable to invite the bank president to dine and they must decide on high shoes or Oxfords for this summer. The literary resource for such is the daily newspaper, that utilitarian collector of present day events that becomes waste paper the moment it is scanned, just as the peel is thrown away after the banana has been eaten. We are not complaining nor finding fault with the detractors of books, for they follow their own bent, which does not happen to be books, and in this they have as much right as has the friend of bound volumes; but, we appeal to their sense of fairness to permit those who appreciate books the same privilege they demand.

This leads up to the discussion of works libraries and their use. The business library, where specialists in the company's line can be consulted, has come to stay. The statistician of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company said recently that "the business library was created to meet special needs and its utility must necessarily depend upon the degree of its success in meeting those special needs." In other words, when we enter the field of technology and trade, the word utility crops up everywhere. Unless a thing is useful for some practical purpose it has no place. That specifies at once what kind of books a works or business library must contain. It may also contain much of entertainment and culture, but works of reference and technology of the business are the nucleus that justifies it.

Nevertheless, no matter how fine the equipment, its destiny falls far from achievement unless the equipment is used. "You can lead a horse to water, but you cannot make him drink" is an old saying." Unless the employe can be brought to use the books, the investment will not pay. They must be tactfully led to the book shelves, interested in certain works that appeal to them and followed up, without compulsion or coercion, until they seem to discover themselves that the library is a profitable place to spend an occasional hour.

The work of a librarian, either paid or voluntary, is as much to secure and hold readers as it is to keep track of books. This we insist upon and with the full knowledge that said librarians will violently protest. There is no one else in the company who has the same interest and opportunity to build up the works library. The physician who hangs out a sign and waits in his arm chair for business will surely starve. He has ways of drumming up business and so has the librarian. In the employment specifications of the latter should be added: "Also, by personal contact with employes, to develop an interest in books and study and increase the use of the library facilities." This would mean contact with employes' meetings, correspondence courses, touch with shop instruction, question or suggestion boxes, first aid instruction and similar organized prevention or rescue organizations, touch with publicity work and co-operation with other libraries and schools.

It is the human element that often makes a bad plan succeed as well as causes a good plan to fail. Therefore, work with men as well as with apparatus and methods to attain higher efficiency. Induce them to improve their technique, but do not overlook those other qualities which make a man a valuable employe. Make it interesting for him to study and become a better mechanic, but also make him the bulwark of the company's greatness. He is the man behind the gun, the one who represents the company in the eyes of the consumer. When he is pleasant, clean, helpful, loyal, obliging, truthful, and a few other things, he advertises his company in just that way. Reading well selected books helps to make this kind of man, but a kind hand on the shoulder and a friendly admonition are great helps. "Don't knock"; say, "Please" and "Thank you"; "Smile." it helps; "the company is our best friend. madam," does no harm; "Be on time"; "Don't make promises when you can't deliver"; "Only a bald-headed man may shine at the top, but the shoes of every one may shine—yea, even at the foot";

"Cultivate a kindly feeling and don't snarl or grouch" may save a man his job, etc.

It doesn't require a librarian to say these things, however. The library attendant finds out what the man needs to know, and tells him where to find it; looks up useful information for him; some day the office will wake up to the fact that the librarian can tell them things they need to know; the librarian can compile from Brown's Directory of American Gas Companies, alone, information that will be of great value to the company, and the same holds with reports, decisions, records and publications. This somewhat rambling appeal for the development of the works library deserves serious thought. It is one way in which the experience of others can be utilized to our own advantage.

A List of Periodical Publications Relating to Municipal Affairs

Compiled by Mabel L. Conat, First Assistant, Reference Department, Public Library, Detroit, Mich.*

In issuing this list, no claim is made that it is complete. A number of periodicals of little apparent value and no longer current have been omitted. Further it is not claimed that all municipal periodicals which are current have been included, especially in the case of local official gazettes. Many cities, particularly those under commission government, are publishing periodical records of their work, and to obtain a complete list of these publications would be almost impossible as the number is constantly changing. It was at first planned to exclude all annual publications, but since it was later felt that no list of municipal periodicals would be sufficiently comprehensive with these omitted, it was thought best to add a short list including only the more important annual publications.

It is extremely difficult to arrive at a satisfactory scheme of classification for a list of this sort, because the tendency of the periodicals is to overlap in purpose and to include subject matter not distinctly within their prescribed fields. Much assistance has been gained from the study of the lists previously published** and the classification followed here is a modification of that used by Mr. J. B. Kaiser. * * The classification is based upon the scope of the periodicals as nearly as that could be determined, although many of the periodicals, because of their diversified subject matter, might easily be included in more than one group.

As far as it could be obtained, information has been given upon the following points: frequency, date of first issue and place of publication. In many cases, when the date of first issue could not be determined with any degree of accuracy, the volume number and date of the earliest numbers in the University of Illinois Library have been stated in order to give some idea of the age of the periodical. For many of the official gazettes, when the date of the first issue could not be secured first hand, the dates given in Checklist of newspapers and official gazettes in the New York Public Library, 1914 (N. Y. P. L. Bulletin J1-D. 1914), have been quoted.

The following symbols have been used throughout the list:

‡ Volume and date of earliest numbers in the University of Illinois Library.

§ Volume and date as given in The New York Public Library Checklist.

bi-w.—bi-weekly.

Bibliography of Municipal Government

The Harvard University Press, Cambridge, Mass., announces a publication that will be of interest to many readers of Special Libraries—"Bibliography of Municipal Government," by William Bennett Munro, Ph.D., LL.B., Professor of Municipal Government in Harvard University. (8vo. Law Buckram. 472 pp. $2.50 net.) It is a classified list of the best materials available for study in every branch of municipal affairs. Particular attention is given to official reports, and to authoritative articles in scientific periodicals on such matters as water supply, sanitation, public lighting, street railways, and so forth. By far the larger part of the references are to publications which have appeared within the last twelve or fifteen years. Great care has been taken to arrange the materials so that they may be easily found, and many of the citations have critical notes. An elaborate author-and-subject index is appended.

The volume contains five thousand titles which are carefully classified into chapters, sections, and sub-sections. The field of municipal government has been viewed in a broad way as including all the activities of the city, whether political, administrative, social, or economic. Nothing has been included, however, which does not, with the widening social horizon of today, concern the student of municipal affairs as such.

The lists are comprehensive but discriminating; they do not aim to include all that has been written on the subject of municipal government in this country, but only those things which are of present-day interest and of permanent value.

In a word the Bibliography is one to which the teacher or student of municipal government, the city official, and the general reader may turn with reasonable assurance of being started on the right road to what he wants. The broad scope of the book may be judged from its table of contents:
