ABSTRACT

The Sorcerer King is a musical stage adaptation of Charles Perrault’s fairytale “Bluebeard.” In a kingdom loosely based on eighteenth-century France, young courtier Catherine unwittingly falls for King Damien, the young monarch whose wife mysteriously disappeared years ago. Meanwhile, peasant Anne, Catherine’s friend, secretly plots a rebellion against whom she perceives as a cruel and apathetic king. As Catherine and Damien’s relationship quickly culminates in marriage, political tensions between the rich and poor rise. Catherine must confront the patriarchal barriers of her station as queen, as well as her own naiveté, to prevent civil war—and learn the truth about her husband.

This project began as a challenge to “Disneyfy” the tale of Bluebeard, an engaging exercise that revealed the sharp differences between the violence of original fairytales and the conflicting expectations of children’s entertainment. Since then, the piece has taken on a surprising life of its own as certain themes and characters matured, creating a surprising mix of lighthearted comedy with heavy, dark dilemmas. Relevant to today’s political climate, The Sorcerer King explores themes of status, responsibility, and the nature of authority. Tonally, the musical offers simple, enjoyable pieces alongside dramatic, sometimes morbid songs.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I owe a great deal of gratitude to Dr. David Kahn, without whose patient guidance and keen eye this script would not have gone farther than an ugly first draft.

Special thanks to Barnaby Dallas, for his consistent support in all my scriptwriting endeavors, and to Alan Soldofsky, with his honest enthusiasm for this unusual project.

And of course, to John, Rebecca, and Rachael.

ACT I .......................................................................................................... 1

ACT II ....................................................................................................... 58
This musical is very loosely based on Charles Perrault’s “Bluebeard,” a fairy tale about a woman who marries the titular nobleman and learns that he is a serial killer: After he leaves for a trip, she disobeys his wishes and enters his forbidden chamber, discovering the bodies of his previous wives hanging on the walls. When he returns, a bloodstain on the key betrays her, and her brothers rescue her just as Bluebeard is about to kill her. Perrault concludes the story with this moral:

Curiosity, in spite of its many charms,
Can bring with it serious regrets;
You can see a thousand examples of it every day.
Women succumb, but it’s a fleeting pleasure;
As soon as you satisfy it, it ceases to be.
And it always proves very, very costly. (Perrault 148)

I found it both curious and a bit frustrating that not only is the primary vice of this tale female curiosity (rather than murder), but also that much of the critical literature acknowledges this as a valid interpretation; Maria Tatar notes,

[F]olklorists have shown surprising interpretive confidence in reading Perrault’s “Bluebeard” as a story about a woman’s marital disobedience or sexual infidelity rather than about her husband’s murderous violence...Illustrators, commentators, and retailers alike seem to have fallen in line with Perrault’s stated view in his moral to the story that “Bluebeard” is about the evils of female curiosity. (Tatar 141)

Therefore, it was important that my heroine’s curiosity be her strongest virtue.

Catherine actively enjoys academic pursuits, and when questions concerning Damien’s motives are posed to her, she seeks answers through study and critical reasoning. Her logistical approach to problems is what quickly makes her a capable leader.

Similar feminist themes are easy to encourage from the basic framework of “Bluebeard.” Catherine’s primary struggle with the leading men is largely based on sexist constructs that she must overcome. Both her father, Claude, and her brother, Tristan, constantly exert their will upon her, insisting that she submit to socially prescribed gender constructs. As a lady of court, she is expected to marry for status; all academic pursuits are nothing but distractions. Despite her status, she has very little say in larger life decisions. Even when she becomes queen, Catherine must fight for a chance to make politically controversial decisions while her husband is away.

Both thematically and musically, I took inspiration from Wicked, the Broadway musical accounting the untold story of The Wizard of Oz’s Wicked Witch of the West, also known as Elphaba, and her friendship with Glinda the Good. Much of Elphaba’s struggle involves the Wizard himself, who is more concerned with keeping the oppressed Animals (talking anthropomorphic animals) silent than serving Oz as a noble ruler. Both Catherine’s and Anne’s struggles are similar in that they must defy the standing government in order to achieve their goals, but the stakes are more personal as both girls harbor opposite sentiments for the king.

Despite the heavy political and moral themes of Wicked, Valerie Lynn Schrader notes the importance of humor in Stephen Schwartz and Winnie Holzman’s stage adaptation of the Gregory Maguire novel. Schrader discusses Wicked’s employment of two stereotypes common in women’s comedy: the “dumb blonde” and “reformer.” She writes: “This stereotype [of the ‘dumb blonde’] frames women as being unintelligent, dependent, self-doubting, and mere sexual objects in the eyes of men,” while “the stereotypical role of the ‘reformer’ suggests that women must always be ‘good’ and seek to make men ‘good’ as well” (Schrader 51). What makes Wicked a work of feminist humor is the eventual breaking of these stereotypes: “[Wicked] subtly challenges stereotypes while superficially describing them, but it also overtly confronts sources of discrimination through the fictional Animal Rights Movement” (Schrader 62). Our “reformer” character, Elphaba, does not retain the proverbial “moral compass” for the sake of men’s praise but rather does what is right despite the public shaming she receives; she also breaks the stereotype by reforming herself. G(a)linda, the “dumb blonde,” is eventually humbled at the lost affections of Fiyero and becomes a true leader upon realizing that popularity is not a viable source of happiness.

Rather unwittingly, I have included similar stereotypes with my two leading female characters. Catherine’s situation calls for the “dumb blonde” persona; she would do better to flirt and seek marriage in court, and her passionate but clumsy persona suggests an endearing naiveté (oddly enough, I also imagine her as a blonde). She subverts the stereotype with her inquisitive nature and intellectual pursuits in science as well as her eventual embrace of her royal title and subsequent responsibilities. Anne, perhaps the “reformer” of this tale, wants justice for wrongdoings committed against her family and constantly refocuses other character’s attention to the larger political goals at hand. Her divergence from the stereotype is her willingness to defy moral ethics to achieve these goals.

It is always difficult to separate a piece’s influences from one’s first. The Glass Menagerie by Tennessee Williams is the first script that really opened my eyes to the unique finesse and craft required in scriptwriting. I was especially struck by Laura’s struggle against her crippling shyness with Jim and the frustrating sadness invoked when the reader realizes their relationship is over before it begins. Despite Damien’s villainy, I strove to create that same aching desire for the romance to play out as it should. I want the audience to silently beg Damien to change, to wish away the small clues of his true nature, rather than insist that Catherine should leave him.

I have always been impressed with Williams’ dialogue as well. He does an excellent job writing concise, expressive dialogue that remains easily accessible for actors and audiences and yet avoids useless small talk and clichés. In A Streetcar Named Desire, for example,

Stella: [crossing to bureau] Stanley doesn’t give me a regular allowance, he likes to pay bills himself, but—this morning he gave me ten dollars to smooth things over. You take five of it, Blanche, and I’ll keep the rest.
Blanche: Oh, no. No, Stella.
Stella: [insisting] I know how it helps your morale just haven a little pocket-money on you.
Blanche: No, thank you—I’ll take to the streets!
Stella: Talk sense! How did you happen to get so low on funds?
Blanche: Money just goes—it goes places. [She rubs her forehead.]
Sometime today I’ve got to get hold of a Bromo!
Stella: I’ll fix you one now.
Blanche: Not yet—I’ve got to keep thinking! (Williams 2213)

With just a little bit of seemingly simple conversation and minimal stage direction, Williams presents character exposition primarily through subtext and diction. Even his punctuation is well chosen, giving the reader a guide to where vocal inflection should occur with em dashes and exclamation points, while still allowing the actor some creative freedom. I took inspiration from his work for my own dialog.

More recent influences include Disney’s Frozen, an animated musical loosely inspired by Hans Christian Anderson’s “The Snow Queen.” I was specifically inspired by the music of Frozen. In an interview, Robert Lopez and Kristen Anderson-Lopez, the husband-wife songwriting team of Frozen, spoke about the importance of cohesive storytelling through their work. “We wanted to write the kind of movie where, if you took the songs out, the movie wouldn’t make sense,” said Robert Lopez. “The songs would each bear some story weight” (DP/30 8:43). Such dynamics can easily be spotted in songs like “Let It Go” and “For the First Time in Forever (Reprise),” which are scenes of conflict and transformation, rather than just character exposition. Stephen Sondheim, renowned composer-lyricist of Company, Sweeney Todd, and Into the Woods, speaks more to this effect but also recognizes a need for balance: “If the lyric is too packed, then the audience’s ear can’t take everything in. It’s like an over-egged cake; it just is too rich. On the other hand, if the lyric is too sparse, it’s dull. So it’s always a juggling act” (PBS NewsHour 1:27).

This specificity, Joanne Gordon suggests, is why Sondheim has made such a name for himself:

> Although the songs and dances in a Rodgers and Hammerstein musical relate to character and text, they have an active life outside the theater. Many of their tunes are standards in the world of popular music. Sondheim's music and lyrics rarely possess this independent life. They are so intimately linked to text and so intricately woven into the fabric of the entire work that they cannot easily stand alone. Other than “Send In the Clowns,” Sondheim has not written a 'hit' tune. (Gurewitsch 5)

Like Sondheim and the Lopezes, I also strove to use my music and lyrics as a tool of world-building that not only creates context within the musical, but also requires it to achieve its greatest impact. “It’s Merry When You Marry” is a lighthearted, energetic song in which Catherine complains to Anne about the problems of high society. The reader may certainly see some implied tension, as Anne is a lower class citizen, but nothing is truly addressed until the reprise in the second act, when Anne rails against Catherine for being passive in her new station as queen. The reprise takes the original melody and twists it darkly, allowing new dimension in the recurring theme of status and responsibility.

It is important to look at other adaptors of Perrault’s “Bluebeard” as well. In her essay, Shuli Barzilai takes a look at Angela Carter’s “The Bloody Chamber” and Anne Thackeray Ritchie’s Bluebeard’s Keys. She writes, > Bluebeard’s Keys may seem by now so far removed from its major fairy-tale intertext, from Perrault’s “Bluebeard,” that it can no longer properly be called a revision or even an adaptation. However, what is remarkable about this retelling is how many identifiable story elements it is able to include and integrate into its divergent narrative. It is as if the author had set herself the task of seeing how far she could stretch the diegetic structure of “Bluebeard,” and how far she could undermine its institutional modalities, while still remaining within it. (Barzilai 117)

It seems, then, that to divert so boldly from the original “Bluebeard” is not uncommon, yet the themes constantly entice writers to revisit the story with a modern perspective. Carter, Ritchie, and even more recent writers such as Margaret Atwood (“Bluebeard’s Egg”) have adapted this tale in striking ways, shifting the feminist lens from different angles to analyze the tale’s patriarchal themes. According to Marina Warner, we especially have Carter to thank for a rising interest in fairy tales. With a slew of post-war feminists renouncing the fairy tale genre and its heroines, Carter “refused to join in rejecting or denouncing fairy tales, but instead embraced the whole stigmatised genre, its stock characters and well-known plots, and with wonderful verve and invention, perverse grace and wicked fun, soaked them in a new fiery liquor that brought them leaping back to life” (Warner).

For further study of “Bluebeard” adaptations, we might turn to renowned fairy tale scholar Jack Zipes, who notes that the effacing of the original author’s name is a fundamental part of the “memetic process that enable[s] a particular fairy tale to become popular and classical in Western culture” (Irresistible 44). The tale of Bluebeard in particular, Zipes notes, has undergone a surprising number of retellings, each one further burying Perrault’s name in favor of the adaptor’s. But while fairy tale adaptations are a rising trend, one must be wary of the ever-present Disney name looming overhead. Zipes discusses the effect of Disney’s commercialization of fairy tales. He writes that bringing the fairy tale to the screen was a chance to pull the fairy tale from the private experience of literature and return it to its originally communal experience:

Instead of using technology to enhance the communal aspects of narrative and bring about major changes in viewing stories to stir and animate viewers, [Disney] employed animators and technology to stop thinking about change, to return to his films, and to long nostalgically for neatly ordered patriarchal realms. (“Disney Spell” 352)

Zipes further discusses that Disney’s tight control over the end product and unwillingness to share credit left little chance for communally inspired creativity; not only were the talented animators slighted, but the need for audience imagination—once necessary for both oral and literary tales—is never encouraged. A stage adaptation, however, is arguably the most honest return to the oral tradition that the modern era maintains: a group of performers work together to tell the story to a live audience, and while much depends on the production, viewers must imagine what they see in its intended context, beyond the physical stage presented.

ACT I

Scene 1

A basement, dark and dank and hardly used. Eerie, mournful music drifts over the stage and swells. Enter REBELS, mostly women, dressed in black, in mourning.

Song: "THE REBELLION (IN THE MINES)"

REBEL 1
(sings)
MY HUSBAND WORKED EVERYDAY IN THE MINES TOILED THROUGH SOIL HE SPENT HIS DAYS IN THE MINES

REBEL 2
MY SON WAS FOURTEEN WHEN HE WENT TO WORK IN THE MINES A BROKEN LEG, A SPRAINED WRIST FROM THE MINES

REBEL 3
OUR MEN SEARCHED AND DUG AND GROUND THEIR WAY THROUGH CAVES OF ROCK AND DARK DECAY

REBELS 1,2,&3
AND THEY FOUND NOTHING.

REBEL 1
WITH THEIR FINAL BREATH WITH CAVES THAT PULLED THEM TO THEIR DEATH NOT A SINGLE STONE TO BUY THEIR LIVES THEY FOUND NOTHING

REBELS 2&3
THEY FOUND NOTHING

ENSEMBLE
NOTHING...

The ensemble of Rebels bow their heads in mourning. The music shifts as ANNE enters. When she sings, the Rebels slowly turn their attention towards her and give her center stage.

ANNE
(sings)
THEY SAY THAT WHEN A LOVED ONE IS LOST A GLOWING STAR IS ADDED TO THE SKY (MORE)

ANNE (cont’d)
    BUT I SUBMIT TO YOU THAT IF THAT MYTH WERE TRUE
    THERE’D BE NO SUCH THING AS NIGHT
        (growing anger)
    TOO LONG WE HAVE WAITED FOR RELIEF FROM OUR NEW KING
    THE YOUNG SON OF A TYRANT

ENSEMBLE
    OH WHAT SORROW HE DID BRING

ANNE
    HE TAKES OUR CROPS TO FEED HIMSELF
    AND ALLOWS HIS MEN TO STEAL OUT WEALTH
    BUT LET US NOT FORGET THE WORST GRIEVANCE OF ALL

ENSEMBLE
    OUR MEN TOIL BENEATH THE EARTH
    DIG THROUGH SOIL WHERE NOTHING’S WORTH
    THE LIVES THAT WE’VE LOST
    IT WON’T STOP UNTIL HE’S GONE, I FORETELL

ENSEMBLE
    NOT UNTIL WE REBEL!

    WILLIAM enters and breaks through the crowd.

WILLIAM
    What are you talking about? Anne, what is this?

ANNE
    We’ve gathered here tonight to take a stand against King Damien. We’ve asked him for years to stop this ridiculous mining project in the northern mountains, and even after the latest tragedy, he still refuses.

WILLIAM Tragedy?

REBEL 4
    A large network of caves collapsed. Twenty-two men were killed.

ANNE
    And our king did nothing. He could’ve prevented this.
    He could’ve listened to us when we first said we shouldn’t dig in the mines.
        (sings)
    THERE’S NOTHING THERE TO FIND
REBEL 5
   NO SILVER

REBEL 6
   NO GOLD

REBEL 7
   NO REASON TO GROW OLD

ENSEMBLE IN THE MINES (echoing)
   NO HOPE IN THE MINES
   NO LIGHT IN THE MINES
   NO LIFE IN THE MINES

   The music softens as William speaks.

WILLIAM
   I am sorry. Truly, I am. Your loss is unfathomable. But violence is not the answer.
      (sings)
   WHAT YOU SPEAK IS TREASON, YOU MUST CEASE
   AS MUCH AS WE WISH OTHERWISE
   THE KING THAT’S OUR IS KING BY RIGHT
   WHAT YOU SEEK CAN BE BOUGHT WITH PEACE

   The music is suddenly harsh again as Anne sings.

ANNE
   INSPIRING WORDS FROM A MAN LIKE YOU
   WHO’S WITNESSED MORE THAN CAN BE PROVED AS MUCH AS YOU PREACH PEACE, I’M NOT DECEIVED
      (to the rebels)
   A FORMER SCHOLAR TO THE KING
   HAS WITNESSED THINGS YOU WON’T BELIEVE (to William)
   TELL THEM EXACTLY WHAT YOU TOLD ME
   TELL THEM OF A KING WE MISPERCEIVE
   OH HOW WE GRIEVE!

REBEL 4
      (speaks)
   Is it true? You once served the king?

WILLIAM
   I--I did--

REBEL 3
   What was he like?
REBEL 5
Why did you leave?

REBEL 6
Do you think he killed the queen?

The rest of the crowd tenses in surprise at the mention of the queen.

REBELS
(murmuring)
The queen! May she rest in peace. What happened to her? We don’t know that she died. Do you really believe he killed her?

WILLIAM
No, no! Stop, please, these are just rumors. I served as the royal librarian for a short time, but I don’t know what happened to Queen Josephine.

ANNE
Tell them what you do know, William. Tell them what you saw.

William looks around at the crowd, sorry that he ever drew attention to himself. He sighs, resigned.

WILLIAM
All right.

As William speaks, Anne and the Rebels back away, and the stage forms into a flashback: A library. Shelves of books and a desk roll in to set the scene.

WILLIAM
I had been teaching at the university when one of the king’s advisers appointed me to manage the library. It was fairly small, but poorly organized. Her Majesty came often to read.

William takes a seat at the desk and begins pouring over papers and stacks of books, immersed in the memory.

Enter JOSEPHINE, 16, dressed very ornately, perhaps uncomfortably so. She seems a bit shy but offers a wide smile to William as she appears.

When he sees her, he stands and bows.
WILLIAM
Good afternoon, Your Majesty.

JOSEPHINE
Hello, William. How is the library coming?

WILLIAM
I'm afraid not so well. I've tried compiling a list of all the texts so I can organize them by author, but not every text has an author, and then of course there's subject matter to consider, the date it was written, how much is historical fact as opposed to folktales and legends, and there's the--

JOSEPHINE
William, I'm getting a headache.

WILLIAM
Forgive me, Your Majesty. I completely understand.

    Josephine takes a random book from the pile and opens it, begins flipping through it idly.

JOSEPHINE
I find it odd that King Julian had so many books in his chambers.

WILLIAM
I'm told he was an avid scholar for much of his life. It seems when the previous librarian passed away, he took all the responsibilities upon himself.

JOSEPHINE
(absently) Odd...

WILLIAM
Your Majesty?

JOSEPHINE
Hm? Oh, forgive me. I mean this book.

WILLIAM
Ah, that one is a history of our kingdom, one of the older ones. Most of the books here are histories and legends.

JOSEPHINE May I...?

WILLIAM
Of course.

Josephine picks up the book, takes a seat nearby, and begins to read. A few of the rebels come on stage, interrupting the memory, and stare at Josephine wonderingly.

REBEL 4
She was quite beautiful.

WILLIAM Yes.

REBEL 5
(almost pleading)
What happened to her?

WILLIAM
I wish I knew. I only know what happened next.

Enter DAMIEN, looking regal and well suited to his power. The rebels back away, frightened and repelled by the sight of him. He doesn’t see them; the scene returns to the memory as dialogue continues.

DAMIEN
Josephine.

Josephine smiles, but William hastens to his feet and bows lowly.

WILLIAM
Your Majesty.

Damien’s attention doesn’t leave Josephine until he places a kiss on her cheek.

DAMIEN
(looking at William)
Who is this?

JOSEPHINE
Damien--my lord, this is William, our new librarian.

DAMIEN
A librarian! What an excellent idea. Father’s chambers were a mess with books. He was quite obsessed.

WILLIAM
(uncertain)
Yes--I mean, perhaps, Your Majesty. He seemed very interested in a wide array of histories of the kingdom.

JOSEPHINE
This book here is about the founding of the kingdom. Have you heard this story?

_Damien takes the book from his wife and begins to read. As Josephine speaks, his expression changes from polite curiosity to intense, almost angry focus._

JOSEPHINE
It says that a great hero, a leader of his people, caught a star one night with his bare hands. He became the first king.

WILLIAM
Many of the books are quite similar, though some seem to mix the legends with the history as if they’re the same. There’s not much continuity, either, I’m afraid, though that’s not unexpected with--

DAMIEN
Is it true?

_(beat)_
Forgive me, I meant--the history and the legends. Can you distinguish between them?

WILLIAM
Not fully, I suppose, but some things are quite obvious. The legend of the first king, of course, catching a falling star with his hand and such, but there are stories like that sprinkled throughout the histories, some rather dark. Some discretion is needing in reading those, of course.

DAMIEN
_(absently, still reading)_
Of course.

_(beat)_
I’d like to take this one, if it doesn’t hinder your work.

WILLIAM Certainly, Your Majesty.

_Damien closes the book and holds it casually, as if his interest is simply mild curiosity._

_Damien turns to his wife, and the two begin speaking without sound. A few rebels intrude upon the memory, observing._

_As William speaks, the couple exit together, Damien’s arm around Josephine._

_(CONTINUED)
WILLIAM
I confess I didn’t find anything truly peculiar at the time, though I suppose I should’ve realized that he had learned our history in his lessons as a boy. But there was a slow change in dynamic between them that was impossible to ignore.

> William takes his seat and returns to studying, > and the scene returns to memory, though the rebels don’t go far. Josephine enters, stomping in frustration.

> William sees her and hurries to his feet.

WILLIAM
Forgive me, Your Majesty, I didn’t see--

JOSEPHINE
How many books, William?

WILLIAM
I...beg your pardon?

JOSEPHINE
How many books has His Majesty taken from this library?

WILLIAM
(fumbling)
Oh, well, Your Majesty, I’m afraid my records aren’t the most, uh...
(off of her glare, relenting)
 Fourteen, Your Majesty.

JOSEPHINE
And how does he expect to read fourteen books in three weeks unless he neglects his responsibilities, his people, his wife... He’s become obsessed, like his father.

WILLIAM
I’m sure he’ll slow down when--

JOSEPHINE
You don’t understand. The stories in those books...
They...they aren’t good. They terrify me.

> Josephine exits, close to tears.

WILLIAM
That was the last time I saw her.
REBEL 2
Did she run away?

REBEL 4
Or was she murdered?

REBEL 5
Perhaps suicide?

WILLIAM
I don’t know. There was no note, or a--body. She just vanished.

Damien, dressed in black, enters with a stack of books and places them on the desk. Damien’s eyes are vacant and unfocused, completely unaware of his spectators.

WILLIAM
I tried to convince him that she might not be dead, that she had just left, but I suppose there was little difference to him.

Damien looks up at William, as though William is speaking to him, and shakes his head dejectedly. He exits.

WILLIAM
He was not the same after that. His mind always seemed somewhere else. Shortly after, I was dismissed from my position.

The memory is over. The shelves and desk and chairs are removed from the stage. The rest of the rebels enter, including Anne, who takes center stage.

ANNE
This is the ruler we have. A king so neglectful that his own wife left him. Or worse.

WILLIAM
Anne, we don’t know what happened--

ANNE
We know enough! We know he doesn’t care, that nothing will be done to change the way we live now.

WILLIAM
What if he would listen to you? Give you an audience to discuss your grievances?

REBEL 1
   We’ve tried.

REBEL 2
   Many times.

REBEL 3
   We can’t even get past the main gate.

WILLIAM
   Perhaps if I arranged a meeting myself. I still have ties in the palace. The king’s advisers might be able to sway him.

ANNE
   It seems highly unlikely, William.

WILLIAM
   But let me try, at least. Please. We can seek justice for your loved ones without violence.

   The Rebels exchange glances uncertainly, then all turn to read Anne’s expression.

ANNE
   All right, William. We won’t do anything until you request an audience.

WILLIAM
   Thank you. I know we can right these wrongs.

   William exits.

REBEL 1
   (to Anne)
   Do you really think it’ll work?

   A ghostly version of THE REBELLION theme drifts under Anne’s words. When she sings, the song begins slowly and quickly builds.

ANNE
   No, but let William do what he likes. He’ll be less inclined to stop us when he realizes what kind of king he’s really protecting.
   (sings)

Scene 2

Moreau Estate. Catherine’s room is stage left, where CATHERINE sleeps, sprawled gracelessly across her bed, still dressed. Charts and diagrams litter the area. A telescope points out the window.

CLAUDE (O.S.)
Catherine. Catherine! You’d better be awake.

Catherine bolts awake, groggy and blinking the sleep out of her eyes. She sees the mess of charts and scrambles to collect them in a heaping mess. With nowhere else to hide them, she shoves them under the bed.

Too late, she realizes her telescope is still up and in full view. She lunges for it and tries dismantling it, but there’s no time--

CLAUDE (O.S.)
Catherine, I swear, if you make today difficult--

Enter CLAUDE, dressed too finely for this early in the morning. Out of options, Catherine holds up the partly dismantled telescope behind her.

CLAUDE
Ah, you’re up.

CATHERINE
Good morning, Father.

CLAUDE
Did you just get up?

CATHERINE
No. I’m dressed, see?

CLAUDE
Weren’t you wearing those clothes yesterday?

CATHERINE
(beat)
No.

_Catherine’s grip slips on the telescope. It topples and crashes to the floor._

_Claude closes his eyes and sighs, fighting the too-familiar frustration._

CLAUDE
You were up all night again.

_Catherine scrambles to pick up the telescope and get it out of sight._

CATHERINE
No, I wasn’t! Papa!

_As he speaks, Claude scours the bedroom until he finds her hidden charts and diagrams._

CLAUDE
You sat at the window, and stared at the stars all night, and drew _pictures_, and wasted your time--

_Claude finds the charts and rifles through them roughly. Catherine reaches to save them._

CATHERINE Papa, don’t--

CLAUDE
Fooling with ridiculous--

CATHERINE Papa!

CLAUDE
_Enough! This is the most ridiculous thing I’ve ever heard of. You sneak away from your lessons during the day to go sit in a university full of _men_ and pour over these ridiculous sketches--for what?_

CATHERINE
But, Mother used to--

CLAUDE
Your mother, for all her interest in this nonsense, never _once_ failed in her responsibilities as a lady of the court.

(beat)
Get dressed. You’ll eat breakfast with your family like a lady, and then you have a dance lesson. And clean up this before you come down. If I see these again, they go in the fireplace.

Claude exits.

Catherine looks around. She starts cleaning up, smoothing out the papers that Claude crinkled, but soon slows down, her anger fading to despondence. She looks out the window, thinking.

Song: "ONE DAY AWAY"

Catherine
(sings)
OH LOOK, THE SUN
IN ALL ITS BRIGHTLY SPLENDOR
TAKING UP THE ENTIRE SKY TO REMIND US ALL OF OUR LIVES DOWN HERE

LET’S PRETEND
WE’RE OH-SO BIG AND IMPORTANT THAT WE’RE NOT JUST LITTLE SPECKS IN A GREAT UNIVERSE

STARE AT THE GROUND
LIKE IT’S ALL THAT’S THERE FORGET ALL YOUR JOYS ANY REASON YOU’RE HERE
WHAT’S RIGHT IN FRONT OF YOU IS ALL YOU’LL EVER KNOW

BUT TELL ME WHEN THE WORLD IS STILL THE LIGHTS OF NIGHT ARE THE GREATEST THRILL A SECRET HIDDEN IN PLAIN SIGHT
SO NOW IT’S ONLY UP TO TIME
TO DRAG THAT STAR ACROSS THE SKY
SO I CAN SEE MILLIONS MORE TONIGHT

OH YES THE NIGHT IS JUST ONE DAY AWAY

MAYBE AT LAST I’LL FINALLY SEE WHERE YOU ARE AND WHERE I’LL BE BUT I KNOW PATIENCE IS KEY SO UNTIL THEN I’LL WAIT FOR NIGHT
IT’S JUST ONE DAY AWAY
OH YES THE NIGHT IS JUST ONE DAY AWAY!

At the end of the song, TRISTAN enters. They halt and stare at each other in surprise.

CATHERINE
Tristan.

TRISTAN
Good morning.

CATHERINE
What are you doing home?

TRISTAN
(strained)
Is that anyway to welcome your brother?

Catherine straightens and curtsies deeply, mockingly.

CATHERINE
Ah, apologies, Sir Knight. How do you fair this fine morning?

TRISTAN
(defeated)
Catherine, please.

CATHERINE
Surely His Majesty hasn’t released the great warrior from his service?

TRISTAN
No. I’m here to escort you and Father to the ball.

CATHERINE
Of course.
(dropping act, honestly confused)
What ball?

TRISTAN
You can’t be serious.

CATHERINE
There’s a ball?

TRISTAN
You really don’t know?

CATHERINE (frustrated)
Yes, I really don’t know! What ball?
TRISTAN
The Harvest Moon Ball? It’s tomorrow.

CATHERINE
Oh. That’s not a ball.

As Tristan speaks, Catherine starts gathering her things, getting ready to leave.

TRISTAN
It is this year. Some special arrangement with the lower class, I suppose. Apparently there’s been some unrest concerning the mining project up north, so this is a way to make peace for... Where are you going?

CATHERINE Nowhere.

TRISTAN
Breakfast is almost ready, and Father wants us to practice dancing--

CATHERINE Bye!

Catherine rushes out before he can stop her.

TRISTAN
You haven’t changed a bit.

Scene 3

A university classroom. William sits at his desk speaking with a student. A few other students, all male, mill about; class has just ended. Anne storms in. The students give her odd, surprised looks.

ANNE
Will-- Professor Durand.

WILLIAM
Hello, Anne. I’ll be with you in a moment.

Anne stands right in front of his desk, blocking William from the other student.

WILLIAM
I’m afraid you’ll have to excuse me, Aubrey. We’ll discuss your coursework later.

The student gives Anne a look of contempt and exits.

(Continued)
WILLIAM
How may I help you, Anne?

ANNE
Is this some kind of joke?

WILLIAM
Anne--

ANNE
A ball? That’s your plan? The Harvest Moon Festival is now a ball?

WILLIAM
It was the best I could do.

ANNE
A festival is no place to talk politics! Why couldn’t the king

WILLIAM
I only managed to speak with his advisers.

ANNE
Oh, lovely.

WILLIAM
This is an invitation for all citizens to attend.

ANNE
No one will take us seriously. They hope we get drunk and forget the whole thing. Or else the king himself will.

WILLIAM
Anne--

ANNE
This is not what you promised. This is not a proper offer of peace.

WILLIAM (firm)
Stop looking for reasons to take violent action. You agreed to remain peaceful for tonight and give negotiations a chance.

ANNE
You truly think one night is going to fix everything?

WILLIAM
I think it’s a step in the right direction.
CATHERINE (O.S.)
Professor!

WILLIAM
(to Anne, more quietly)
And it’s all you have now.

Enter Catherine, struggling to carry all her charts.

CATHERINE Professor Durand!

WILLIAM
Good afternoon, Catherine.

Catherine pushes past a few other students, nearly dropping her charts.

CATHERINE
Excuse me, sorry. On your right, there. Oh, can you grab that? Thanks. Nice jacket. Professor, did you see it? Oh, hi Anne.

ANNE Hi, Cat.

WILLIAM See what?

Catherine dumps her charts on the desk unceremoniously.

CATHERINE
There was a small meteor shower. Well, I think, I’m not sure. Could’ve been smudges on my telescope lens. And I thought Mars was a bit brighter, did you?

TRISTAN
I didn’t look, but it’s that time of year, so I wouldn’t be surprised. And what time was the meteor shower?

CATHERINE
Around two o’clock?

WILLIAM
Goodness. Catherine, you should get sleep.

CATHERINE
Would you mind if I took a look at your charts? Just to compare from last year?
WILLIAM
Of course not, help yourself. I’m sure Anne will help you tidy up when you’re done.

Anne gives him a hard, knowing look.

WILLIAM
I’m afraid I must be off. I’ll see you ladies tomorrow at the ball.

CATHERINE
Bye, Professor.

He exits. Catherine starts looking at charts while Anne begins sweeping.

CATHERINE
(to Anne)
You’re going to the ball?

ANNE
Yes, I suppose.

CATHERINE
Oh, then maybe I won’t be so difficult about going.

Song: "IT’S MERRY WHEN YOU MARRY"

ANNE
A ball sounds like fun. Dancing, fancy dresses, and I bet the food is amazing.

CATHERINE
Yeah, but you’ve never worn a corset.

ANNE Fair point.

CATHERINE
(sings)
YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO FIT INTO PINCHY SHOES

ANNE True.

CATHERINE
YOU’VE NEVER BEEN SO TIED INSIDE YOUR POOFY FAT DRESS THAT YOU CAN BARELY MOVE
YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO FLIRT
YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO GIGGLE AND SMILE AND WAVE
YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO SAY TONIGHT
IS THE HIGHLIGHT OF YOUR LIFE AND PRATTLE TILL HE SAYS "GOOD DAY"
CONTINUED: 20.

ANNE
Okay, but wait--

CATHERINE BUT SOMETIMES I WONDER IF IT’S WORTH IT
IF I’LL MEET A MAN WHO’LL HOLD MY ATTENTION AND DESERVES IT AND THE CROWD WILL CHEER AND WAVE
ON OUR SUNNY WEDDING DAY AND IT’S ALL DOWN HILL FROM THERE

ANNE
I think you’re being a bit overly dramatic.

CATHERINE
Oh, really?
        (sings)
YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO DANCE
AND TRUST ME, IT’S DIFFICULT ENOUGH TO WALTZ
WHEN THE MAN YOUR FATHER CHOSE KEEPS STEPPING ON YOUR TOES AND HE HOLDS YOU WITH SWEATY PALMS (solemn)
YOU’VE NEVER BEEN THOUGHT A FOOL
YOU’VE NEVER BEEN TOLD THAT YOU SHOULDN’T SPEAK TO HAVE EVERYTHING YOU SAY
BE DISREGARDED IN EVERY WAY
BECAUSE YOU’RE SMALL AND PRETTY AND WEAK
BUT SOMETIMES, I WONDER IF IT’S WORTH IT
JUST HOLD MY HEAD UP HIGH AND WAIT AND ENDURE IT I’LL PRETEND THAT I DON’T KNOW WHERE IT IS I WANT TO GO FOR ONCE, MY BROTHER WON’T ARGUE FOR ONCE, MY FATHER WILL SMILE AND EVERYONE WILL BE EXACTLY WHERE THEY SHOULD

ANNE
Catherine, that’s not true--

CATHERINE
And that’s exactly why I won’t!
        (sings)
OH SURE, IT’S MERRY WHEN YOU MARRY BUT UNTIL THEN I’LL BE WARY OF EVERY MAN THAT COMES MY WAY

ANNE
You still can’t miss the ball.

(CONTINUED)
CATHERINE
I can try.

Catherine sits quietly, considering.

Scene 4

At the Harvest Moon Ball. COURTIERS are dressed splendidly, talking and flirting with each other. Music is playing, but no one is dancing yet. Enter Catherine, Tristan, and Claude.

CLAUDE
Stop fidgeting, Catherine.

CATHERINE
Let me undo my hair. This bun is dreadful.

CLAUDE
Your bun looks fine.

CATHERINE
I mean it’s uncomfortable.

CLAUDE
And stand up straight.

CATHERINE
(still fidgeting)
Believe me, Father, I really don’t have a choice.

TRISTAN
Catherine, please.

Catherine gives him a look, which he ignores. She looks at the crowd.

CATHERINE
Why is no one dancing?

TRISTAN
I guess the king hasn’t made an appearance yet. We should probably socialize.

CATHERINE
Great, I’m going to go that way and socialize.

TRISTAN What?

CATHERINE
Yes, let’s split up. Cover more ground, you know.

TRISTAN
Catherine...

CATHERINE
Come on, you don’t want me tagging along when the girls over there is eyeing you, do you?

Catherine gestures to a group of GIRLS who are indeed looking at Tristan and giggling. While he’s distracted, Catherine casually slips out of the ballroom unnoticed.

Enter Anne and William, along with two other Rebels. Anne and the Rebels are obviously out of place; their best clothes are nothing like those of the Courtiers, who stair disdainfully in their direction.

ANNE
This was a terrible idea.

WILLIAM
Give it a chance, Anne. Why don’t you introduce yourself?

ANNE
I’m not speaking with anyone other than the king.

WILLIAM
You can at least attempt conversation with some of his advisers. You’re likely to get a more cooperative audience with them.

ANNE
Because they know how to say a lot of nothing. I won’t get any guarantees from an adviser.

WILLIAM
Don’t be impossible, please.

Anne folds her arms and holds her ground, glaring at William. The other two rebels share a glance, shrug, and fold their arms like Anne. William sighs in exasperation.

WILLIAM
Fine. We’ll wait.

In his chambers, stage left, Damien is dressing himself in uncomfortable and elaborate clothing. He seems to be looking in a mirror, and though he appears impressive, he is largely apathetic to what he sees.
Enter JEAN.

JEAN
Your Majesty, most of the guests have arrived.

DAMIEN
And yet the more I try to muster the sense of importance, the less inclined I am to go downstairs.

JEAN
Sire, I hate to seem out of place--

DAMIEN
Of course you do--

JEAN
But this ball could stop the various attacks your soldiers have been enduring.

DAMIEN
"Attacks" seems like a strong word. They should be able to handle peasants.

JEAN
And yet everyone will benefit if you can convince the... lower class that you mean them well.

DAMIEN
It should be irrelevant.

JEAN Sire?

DAMIEN
(still quiet, but fierce)
I should not be questioned. I should not be challenged. My authority should not be a topic of discussion. I am the king. I have other matters to attend to.

JEAN
(uncertain, a bit fearful)
Of course, Your Majesty. I will fetch your cape.

Jean exits. Damien stares at himself in the mirror, then looks away, frustrated.

Song: "THE TRIAL OF THE KING"

DAMIEN
(sings)
HE DOESN'T KNOW WHO ELSE CAN KNOW THE BURDEN I POSSESS
(MORE)
DAMIEN (cont’d)
A KINGDOM I MUST COMMAND
RESENTMENT I MUST STAND
HOW CAN I PLEASE SOME BUT NOT THE REST
I LEAVE THEM ALONE, THEY STARVE
I RULE WITH POWER, THEY CHARGE
WHAT AM I SUPPOSED TO DO WHEN THERE’S NO SUCH THING AS RIGHT
I MUST FOREVER ENDURE
THE TRIAL OF THE KING

WHAT’S THERE TO DO
WHAT CAN BE ACHIEVED WITH JUST TALKING AND PLANNING

TO MAKE A KINGDOM GREAT THERE’S MUCH I MUST TAKE TO SEE THIS VISION REALIZED

I SEEK ONLY TO LEAD THEM ALL YET HERE THEY ARE TONIGHT, THE GALL TO SUGGEST THAT MY RULE IS LESS THAN DIVINE
I ALONE MUST ENDURE
THE TRIAL OF THE KING

TRAGEDIES THAT I COULD NOT HAVE FORESEEN AND JOSEPHINE...

Enter Catherine, pulling a small telescope out of the folds of her skirt. She spots and window and, without even noticing Damien, points her telescope up and looks out, completely focused.

Damien turns and sees her.

DAMIEN
Excuse me.

Catherine straightens in surprise.

CATHERINE
Oh! Sorry, I didn’t see you.

DAMIEN
What are you doing?

CATHERINE
Looking through a telescope.

She returns to stargazing. Damien stares at her, somewhat helpless.
DAMIEN
Do you... need to do that here?

CATHERINE
(not looking up)
Considering this is the first window I’ve found, I don’t have much choice.

DAMIEN (struggling)
I... Do you know where you are?

CATHERINE
Um, the king’s palace. A bit smaller than I expected, but the view is perfect.

DAMIEN
You...
(giving up)
You like the view, huh?

CATHERINE
Mhmm. You’ve got a nice view of Mars from here.

Damien comes to the window, suddenly curious. He looks over her shoulder.

DAMIEN
Are you talking about the star by Ursa Major?

CATHERINE
Just under it, yes.

DAMIEN
(flirtatious)
You certain that’s not Venus?

CATHERINE
No, it’s not Venus.

DAMIEN
Why not?

CATHERINE
Well because... What makes you think it’s Venus?

DAMIEN
Because it’s so bright.

Enter Jean carrying a cape.

JEAN
Pardon the wait, I-- (seeing Catherine)
Oh, forgive my intrusion, sire--

DAMIEN
    (speaking over him)
It’s quite all right, Jean. I’ll take the cape.
    He does.

DAMIEN
I’ll be down in a moment.
    Jean bows and exits again.

CATHERINE
Who was that?

DAMIEN
The king’s ever-helpful attendant. I have to go downstairs.
    (pause)
Are you coming?

CATHERINE Hm?

DAMIEN Downstairs.

CATHERINE Sure.
    Catherine continues to look out her telescope.

CATHERINE
I wish I had my telescope from home.

DAMIEN
    (beat)
I also have a telescope.

CATHERINE
Did you happen to bring it with you?
    Jean enters again, holding a crown.

JEAN
Pardon me, sire--

(CONTINUED)
DAMIEN
   Thank you, Jean.

   Jean places it on his head and exits. Damien ties on the cape, approaches Catherine, and offers his arm.

DAMIEN
   If you would be so kind.

CATHERINE To what?

DAMIEN
   To let me escort you downstairs.

   Catherine sighs and lowers her telescope.

CATHERINE
   All right.

   Catherine takes his arm and looks up.

CATHERINE
   Why are you wearing...?
   (she realizes) Oh my--

   Trumpets BLARE a fanfare. Catherine jumps in surprise, but Damien smiles.

Damien leads Catherine back into the main hall, where courtiers are milling about. Upon his entrance, every one bows. Tristan, Claude, and Anne stare blankly at Catherine before bowing as well.

CATHERINE
   I am in so much trouble.

DAMIEN
   Not if I say you’re not.

CATHERINE
   But I--

DAMIEN
   Care to dance?

   Music begins, and Damien leads Catherine into a dance. The rest of the courtiers pair up and join them. Catherine starts out looking very uncomfortable, both in her dance and expression.

But slowly, she begins to enjoy herself. As she and Damien dance, the people around them slow, as though time itself as stopped.

Stage right, Anne, William, and the rebels watch, disbelieving.

WILLIAM
Well, this is...unexpected.

ANNE
Catherine told me she hated dancing.

WILLIAM
Then she shouldn’t be long.

ANNE
I’m not waiting.

WILLIAM
Well, what do you expect me to do?

ANNE Cut in.

WILLIAM
I can’t do that!

Anne glares at him until he sighs.

WILLIAM
You tire me, Anne.

William wades his way through the crowd awkwardly until he reaches Catherine and Damien.

WILLIAM
Pardon me. May I cut in?

Catherine and Damien stop in their twirling. Catherine looks dazed, like waking from a dream, but Damien looks dangerously affronted, as though he can’t believe William’s gall.

Catherine recovers first.

CATHERINE
Oh, sure!

(to Damien)

Excuse me.
DAMIEN
   Of course.

   Damien watches as William leads Catherine away, his expression dangerous. He reigns it in and exits the dance floor.

   Meanwhile, Anne watches, gathering the courage to speak with the king. She takes a breath and approaches him.

ANNE
   Excuse me, Your Majesty. Your Majesty?

   Damien looks at her, again surprised. He gives her the once-over and is duly unimpressed.

ANNE
   My name is Anne. I’d like to speak with you for a moment about the mining project that the crown has been funding...?

   Anne pauses, but Damien says nothing. She continues, her unease growing.

ANNE
   Well, I’d like to...discuss with you the...parameters of this project. You know of the accident that happened recently?

WILLIAM
   (long pause) Accident?

ANNE (anger growing)
   You...don’t know? You don’t even know? More than twenty men died in those caves and you didn’t know?

   Nearby courtiers pause at the outburst. William and Catherine pause as well.

CATHERINE
   What’s going on?

WILLIAM
   Oh no.

   William rushes over to intercept. Catherine follows more slowly, confused.

(CONTINUED)
ANNE
You dare have your men work for you and die for you while you pay them scraps--

WILLIAM
Your Majesty, I apologize. I should’ve spoken with you privately--

DAMIEN
(slowly, dangerously)
You dare...

CATHERINE
Anne? What’s going on?

ANNE
Nothing, Catherine, don’t worry about it.

Anne stares at the king, challenging. Damien composes himself in front of Catherine.

DAMIEN
A simple misunderstanding, Lady Catherine. I didn’t know this was a friend of yours.

CATHERINE
Of course. Is something wrong--?

WILLIAM
I think it’s best that we leave now. If you’ll pardon us, Your Majesty. Anne?

Anne pauses for a moment, coming to a conclusion.

ANNE
Yes.

Anne curtsies deeply, sarcastically.

ANNE
Have a lovely evening. Your Majesty.

She turns and leaves. William bows and hurries after her.

CATHERINE
Anne, wait--

DAMIEN
Would you care to dance? Just once more?

He offers his hand. Catherine glances back at Anne, but she’s gone. Catherine takes his hand, and they begin to dance again.
Scene 5

The following morning. Catherine is in the classroom again with William’s notes in front of her, while Anne sweeps up angrily. Catherine tries to concentrate, but grows increasingly frustrated with Anne.

ANNE
And the king didn’t talk to a single person there. What’s the point of hosting a festival if you’re not going to speak to people of all social classes?

CATHERINE
Perhaps you would’ve held his attention longer if you hadn’t yelled at him. What were you talking about?

ANNE
It’s—you don’t need to worry about it.

CATHERINE
If it’s something you wanted to bring to the king, then it must be important.

ANNE
It’s just...commoner worries. You wouldn’t understand.

Catherine grows silent, considering.

CATHERINE
You know, I think if you went to the king again, he would listen.

ANNE
Catherine--

CATHERINE
You could arrange a meeting, or an audience with the king. Bring some friends--

ANNE
He doesn’t care, Cat! The king doesn’t care about us.

CATHERINE
That’s not true!

ANNE
He didn’t respond to what I was saying.

CATHERINE
Maybe because you were shouting at him in a room full of people.
ANNE
I truly believe he would’ve had me hanged if you hadn’t been there.

CATHERINE What?

ANNE
You didn’t see it, Catherine. He had this--dangerous look in his eyes. I thought he might strike me right there.

CATHERINE
I don’t understand why you’re so angry, but you have no reason to take it out on Damien.

Anne pauses in her work, noticing something different in her friend.

ANNE
I noticed you dance with Damien quite a bit.

CATHERINE
Only a few songs.

ANNE
Five, I think.

CATHERINE
No, it wasn’t five. And how would you know? You left early.

A pause.

ANNE
What did you two talk about?

CATHERINE
Nothing much. I mean, talking is kind of odd while dancing, isn’t it? Are you supposed to talk while you dance?

ANNE
(suspicious)
And what did you think of the king?

CATHERINE
Oh, he was...quite nice. And intelligent. And a good dancer, though I’m not a great dancer so I’m not a great judge of that kind of thing, but--

(CONTINUED)
ANNE
   You must be joking.

CATHERINE
   What?

ANNE
   You fancy him!

CATHERINE
   No, I--

ANNE
   You fancy the king!

CATHERINE
   Anne, I--

ANNE
   Incredible. Everything that’s been going on, and you fall for him.

CATHERINE
   I didn’t say I’ve fallen for him. And what are you talking about, what’s been going on?

   Anne stares at Catherine for a moment, debating for the first time whether or not she should tell Catherine.

ANNE Nothing.

CATHERINE
   (beat)
   You’re not telling me something.

ANNE
   And you’re not telling me something, so let’s drop it, all right.

   (long pause)
   I’ll be seeing you.

   Before Catherine can say anything, Anne exits.

   Catherine considers this, then, in a huff, grabs her stuff and leaves.

   Enter a MESSENGER.

MESSENGER
   Pardon me, milady.
CATHERINE
  Hm, me?

MESSENGER
  Are you Lady Catherine Moreau?

CATHERINE
  Yes.

MESSENGER
  I come at the behest of His Majesty the King. He requests your presence at his palace this evening.

CATHERINE
  He does?

MESSENGER
  Yes, milady.

CATHERINE
  Oh.

MESSENGER
  Milady would be most advised to accept.

CATHERINE
  Yes...all right, I do accept.

    The Messenger takes her bags.

MESSENGER
  Very good, milady. If you'll follow me, I have a carriage ready--

CATHERINE
  Wait, now?

MESSENGER
  Yes, milady.

CATHERINE
  Right now?

MESSENGER
  Yes, milady.

CATHERINE
  But I'm not ready or dressed properly or--

MESSENGER
  I have been told to assure milady that His Majesty doesn't care.
CATHERINE
   Oh...all right, then.

   Catherine and the Messenger exit.

Scene 6

The king’s chamber. Damien sits at his telescope with charts in hand. Enter Catherine.

CATHERINE
   Hello Dam--Your Majesty.

DAMIEN
   Catherine, you’re here! I...
       (fumbling)
   I thought you’d want your telescope back. You left it here last night.

   He hands it to her.

CATHERINE
   Thank you.

DAMIEN
   You’re welcome.

CATHERINE
   (pause)
   You invited me all the way here just to return my telescope?

DAMIEN
   No, that was an excuse.

CATHERINE
   And excuse for what?

DAMIEN
   ...Dinner?

CATHERINE
   Oh.

DAMIEN
   Please, don’t feel obliged to stay.
       (pause)
   I mean, I’d certainly like you to stay, but I don’t want...I don’t want it to seem...

CATHERINE
   All right.
       (beat)
   (MORE)

CATHERINE (cont’d)
I’ll stay for dinner.

DAMIEN
Wonderful. Great. I thought we’d eat up here. I wanted to show you my telescope.

He points to it. Catherine can’t help but be interested.

CATHERINE
It’s incredible. May I?

DAMIEN
Of course.

Catherine sits and takes a look. She smiles.

CATHERINE
I thought so.

DAMIEN What?

CATHERINE
That planet we saw last night was Mars, not Venus. You can tell by it’s position this early.

DAMIEN
Let me see.

He takes her place. They are quite close now.

DAMIEN
(smiling)
I’m still not sure. It might be Venus.

Catherine slowly creates distance between them, not sure if she wants to be that close. She looks around for some other subject and spots the CHAMBER door.

CATHERINE
What’s in there?

DAMIEN
Ah, well, that’s my private chamber.

CATHERINE
The king’s private chamber needs a private chamber?

(CONTINUED)
DAMIEN
(laughs it off, uncomfortable)
Ah, well. No one is allowed in there but myself. Family secrets, you could say.

CATHERINE
You have a lot of secrets?

DAMIEN
No, not really.

_Song: "SECRETS IN THE STARS"

CATHERINE
(sings)
I’M NOT SURE HOW THIS REALLY GOES I’M NOT SURE WHAT TO SAY
MY HEART WON’T CALM DOWN
MY HEAD’S IN THE CLOUDS AND I CAN’T DECIDE IF I SHOULD RUN OR STAY

DAMIEN
IT’S DIFFICULT TO SEE EXACTLY WHAT YOU THINK OF ME
IS IT TOO EARLY TO HOPE FOR SOMETHING IS IT TOO SOON TO SAY I SEE SOMETHING STARTING HERE

CATHERINE
I THINK I WANT TO SLOW DOWN
BUT I DON’T WANT TO STOP THIS FEELS LIKE A CHANCE I’VE NEVER HAD BUT HOW CAN I BE SURE

DAMIEN
THE STARS GLOW BRIGHTER TONIGHT OR IS IT JUST WHAT I’M WAITING FOR BOTH I CAN ONLY HOPE THAT YOUR HEART IS PART

OF THOSE SECRETS IN THE STARS

Scene 7

_The music shifts to something more ominous as the next scene opens: Anne and the rebels are in the university basement for a secret meeting. Anne stands at the front._

_Song: "THE REBELLION (Reprise)"

(Continued)
REBEL 1
    I knew this would happen!

REBEL 2
    The king made fools of us.

REBEL 3
    He must’ve set that whole thing up just to be spiteful.

REBEL 4
    He doesn’t care!

REBEL 5
    What do we do?

    Anne steps forward.

ANNE
    (sings)
    AS EXPECTED FROM OUR KING
    WE’VE BEEN IGNORED AND DECEIVED
    HOW CAN WE NOT ACT NOW THAT WE’VE BEEN SCORNED

ENSEMBLE
    WE ARE STARVING, WE ARE POOR
    SO WHAT’S LEFT TO US BUT WAR

ANNE
    PEACE WON’T LAST UNTIL HE’S OVERTHROWN!

    William breaks through the crowd and approaches Anne.

WILLIAM
    Stop this, Anne!

ANNE
    I did what you asked, and the king proved to be exactly who I said he was. And now it’s time for action. It’s time for justice!

    The Rebels cheer.

    William grabs Anne by the arm and pushes her out of hearing from the others.

WILLIAM
    You are leading these people to their deaths!

ANNE
    Better to die for something than live for nothing.
WILLIAM
You foolish girl. You know nothing. You have no idea the destruction you’re creating.

ANNE
Something needs to be done. No one will ever stop him, more people will die--what’s one more life?

WILLIAM
You have no plan, no way of enacting what you want, and no idea what you’ll do if you succeed. You could very well bring the entire kingdom to ruin.

ANNE
I’m tired of trying to justify myself to you. You’re either with us or against us.

A long pause. William backs from her and speaks loudly, catching the Rebels’ attention.

WILLIAM
I refuse to be a part of your quest for vengeance. You know longer have my support.

The Rebels watch quietly as he exits.

REBEL 4
(to Anne)
What do we do now?

REBEL 6
He’s closer to the king than anyone else here.

ANNE
He wouldn’t have helped us, anyway. We’ll figure something out. For now, let’s call it a night, everyone. We’ll meet here tomorrow and discuss

The Rebels begin to exit.

REBEL 1
Aren’t you heading home, too?

ANNE
I will in a moment. Good night.

REBEL 1
Good night.

Rebel 1 follows the others out.

Anne stands alone, looking downtrodden for the first time. She looks up, as though looking at the sky

Song: "REQUIEM FOR PEACE"

ANNE

(sings)
IT’S BEEN FOUR YEARS
SINCE I SAW YOU LAST AND STILL THE WORLD HASN’T CHANGED

YOUR STARS ARE UP THERE OR SO THEY SAY
BUT NIGHT HAS NEVER BEEN MORE STRANGE

IF PEACE WERE POSSIBLE WOULD I NOT KNOW IT IF HAPPINESS COULD BE WOULDN’T I HAVE FOUND IT

HOW ELSE CAN I FIND PEACE
UNLESS WITH BLOOD ON MY HANDS OR IS PEACE A SILLY FANTASY IS IT ALONE I MUST STAND

SO BE IT
SO BE IT
So be it.

Enter Tristan.

TRISTAN
Hello?

Anne jumps in surprise and hastily wipes her eyes.

TRISTAN
I’m sorry, I didn’t mean to startle you. I’m looking for my sister, Catherine.

ANNE
Catherine? She’s not here.

TRISTAN
Do you know where she would be?

ANNE
With the king, I would imagine.

TRISTAN
The...king. The king? Why?

ANNE
He likely asked her to dine with him tonight.

(CONTINUED)
TRISTAN
He...wow...this is...this is incredible. Of all men to take an interest in Catherine--Father will be beside himself.

ANNE
You must be Tristan.

TRISTAN
Yes! Pardon my manners. I’m Tristan Moreau of the Royal Guard.

He takes her hand and bows, like they were in court.

ANNE
The Royal Guard? You serve in the king’s army?

TRISTAN
When needed, yes, but mostly I guard the palace.

ANNE
Do you...know the king?

TRISTAN
Personally, no. But I know he is well liked among the guard.

ANNE
(defeated)
Of course he is. The guard can do whatever they like under his reign.

TRISTAN
Pardon my asking, but why are you down here?

ANNE
I work here. I clean the classrooms and such.

TRISTAN
But so late? Do you need an escort home? I could--

ANNE
Stop talking like that!

TRISTAN
Like--what?

ANNE
Like we’re at a ball, in the palace instead of a basement. Like I’m not a filthy peasant--complete dirt compared to you! Like you could do whatever you wanted with me right now without consequence.

Tristan is silent for a moment, comprehending.

TRISTAN
There are many in my station who...take advantage of the authority given them.

ANNE
(laughs humorlessly)
You have no idea. The entire world is against me.

TRISTAN
If I may--What happened?

Anne looks to him, considering.

TRISTAN
You don’t need to tell me, I know I’m being forward.

ANNE
(a pause)
It was four years ago.

Flashback: Enter ANNA’S MOTHER, ANNA’S FATHER, and ANNA’S SISTER. Anna joins them. Tristan watches as she reenacts the memory for him.

ANNE
We lived on a farm just west of the main city. We lived very modestly and worked hard and minded our own business. My brother was working extra in the city, trying to save up for university. One night, when I was ten, we had a knock at the door.

A KNOCK. Enter a GUARD.

GUARD
The kingdom taxes have increased.

ANNE’S FATHER
We’ve paid our taxes. We have no more.

ANNE
They argued. The Guard grew angry.

The Guard draws his sword and backs out. The door slams shut.

ANNE
He locked us in and set the house on fire.

The family panics and huddles.

(CONTINUED)
ANNE
My father was able to bash a hole in the wall just big enough for me to squeeze through.

ANNE’S FATHER
(to Anne)
I want you to crawl through here and run to the city. Don’t stop and don’t look back. And remember; I love you.

The family exits.

ANNE
I ran all night and didn’t look back once. It was William who found me. The next day, there was nothing but smoldering ash. William tried to appeal to the king, but he ended up losing his position at the palace. The king didn’t want to be bothered by it.

TRISTAN
I am sorry.

ANNE
My story is one of hundreds like it. The problem is more deeply rooted than a bunch of arrogant men. The king himself refuses to lead.

TRISTAN
I don’t think--

ANNE
Most recently, a cave in the mines collapsed and killed twenty-two men, and our king didn’t even know of it.

TRISTAN
That may not be his fault--

ANNE
And let’s not forget Queen Josephine. I don’t believe she left, or ran away, or whatever the official story is. I believe the king knows exactly what happened.

TRISTAN
(beat)
What you speak is treason.

ANNE (scoffs)
Treason. Men can kill my entire family without hesitating, and yet to speak of the king poorly in an empty basement deserves a hanging.

TRISTAN
(pause)
I have no right to judge you. I suppose, if I had someone to blame for my mother's death, I would feel the same as you.

A silence settles between them; something has changed, but neither is sure what.

ANNE
Well, I better be heading home.

TRISTAN
(uncertain)
Yes, me too. Did you still want an escort?

ANNE
No, thank you. Good night.

Anne makes to leave.

TRISTAN
Your name! I don’t know your name.

ANNE
(beat)
I’m Anne.

TRISTAN
It was lovely to meet you, Anne.

Anne nods, unsmiling, not sure she likes where this is going. She exits.

Scene 8

Catherine’s bedroom the following morning. She wakes up slowly, comfortably, the happiness of the night before still lingering. She starts to hum as she dresses.

Tristan approaches her door, braces himself, and knocks. Catherine looks up in surprise.

CATHERINE Come in.

Tristan enters the room.

TRISTAN Morning.
CATHERINE
Don’t tell me there’s another ball tonight.

TRISTAN
I just said "good morning."

CATHERINE
You did, I remember.

An uncomfortable silence settles between them as Catherine gets ready for the day.

TRISTAN
I wanted to ask you about something.

CATHERINE
Did you?

TRISTAN
Yes, I did.

CATHERINE
It’s probably none of your business.

TRISTAN
I know you danced with the king at the ball the other night.

CATHERINE
I did.

TRISTAN
Well, I was wondering...I’d like to know if you...have feelings for him.

CATHERINE
That is none of your business!

TRISTAN

(beat)
This hostility you harbor against me seems a lot more trouble than it’s worth.

CATHERINE
It’s really no trouble at all.

TRISTAN
Why are you always so angry with me? I’ve done nothing to deserve this!

CATHERINE
No, of course you haven’t!

Song: "YOU KNOW BEST"

CATHERINE
(sings)
ALL MY LIFE I’VE BEEN TOLD HOW GREAT YOU ARE THE PERFECT, EXEMPLARY OLDER BROTHER AND NO MATTER WHAT I DO
IT’S NO GOOD COMPARED TO YOU
THE PERFECT SON FOR A HIGH-STRUNG FATHER

TRISTAN
Even if that’s true, it’s not my fault--

CATHERINE AND THEN MOTHER GOT SICK AND COULDN’T GET WELL
STARS NEVER BURNED AS BRIGHT

The song has softened, and so has Catherine. Tristan steps forward to console her.

TRISTAN
Catherine...

CATHERINE AND THEN YOU LEFT
(harsh again)
BEFORE SHE WAS EVEN IN THE GROUND
YOU LEFT US HERE ALONE AND PROVED WHAT I’VE KNOWN ALL ALONG

JOIN THE GUARD, FATHER SAID
BECAUSE IT’S BETTER TO WIND UP DEAD WITH HONOR FOR YOUR SERVICE
BUT YOU ONLY PROVED TO ME THAT YOU’RE A COWARD TO THE END

TRISTAN Enough!
(sings)
YOU THINK YOU KNOW ME
YOU THINK IT WAS THAT EASY TO LEAVE AFTER WHAT HAD HAPPENED
YOU’RE NOT THE ONLY ONE
WHO LIVES UNDER FATHER’S THUMB
YOU’RE JUST AS SELFISH AS YOU WERE BACK THEN

NEVER MIND, YOU ALWAYS SAID FORGET RESPONSIBILITIES, ‘CAUSE THEN YOU CAN KEEP YOUR HEAD UP IN THE STARS

BOTH
BUT OF COURSE DON’T LET ME STOP YOU FROM WHATEVER YOU’D LIKE TO DO YOU CAN AVOID ME ALL YOU LIKE

CATHERINE
WHAT DO I KNOW?

TRISTAN WHO CARES WHAT I THINK?

BOTH FOR SURELY YOU KNOW BEST

TRISTAN
Why were you late coming home last night?

CATHERINE
You wouldn’t believe me if I told you.

TRISTAN
Meeting a lover?

CATHERINE
Wouldn’t you like that?
(sings)
A CHANCE TO BE DONE WITH ME HAND ME OFF TO SOME UNSUSPECTING SOUL A MAN WHO’LL TEACH ME MY PLACE IN A WAY YOU NEVER COULD ON YOUR OWN

TRISTAN
YOU’RE STUBBORN, YOU’RE SELFISH YOU DON’T EVER HEED GOOD COUNSEL

CATHERINE
THE LIST COULD GO ON AND ON BUT WHAT DO I KNOW?

TRISTAN WHO CARES WHAT I THINK?

BOTH

TRISTAN
You need to consider things before you get too deep.

CATHERINE
Yes, I’m much too reckless to make decisions for myself, aren’t I?
TRISTAN
Have you considered Josephine? No one knows what happened to her.

CATHERINE
UGLY RUMORS YOU WOULD HEED
BEFORE YOU’D EVER LISTEN TO ME
AND STILL YOU PRETEND YOU REALLY CARE BUT WHAT DO I KNOW?

TRISTAN WHO CARES WHAT I THINK?

BOTH
FOR SURELY YOU KNOW BEST

Catherine storms out. Tristan hangs his head in frustration.

Scene 9

In the king’s chamber, Catherine and Damien sit side-by-side. Damien looks through his telescope. Catherine holds a few charts in her lap, but she doesn’t pay much attention to them.

DAMIEN
Ah, how interesting.

CATHERINE Hmm.

DAMIEN
Mars seems to have started its retrograde motion. I didn’t think that would happen this early in the year. Do you want to see? Catherine?

CATHERINE Hmm?

DAMIEN
Are you all right?

CATHERINE
(beat)
Yes! Yes, I’m all right. I’m great. Dinner was lovely, really.

DAMIEN
It was the fish, wasn’t it?

(CONTINUED)
CATHERINE
    No, no--well, it might have been a bit overcooked, but that’s not--

DAMIEN
    I’ll banish the chef immediately.

CATHERINE
    What? No don’t--

DAMIEN
    But, in the mean time, how about we get you some tea? Jean? Jean?

CATHERINE
    You told him to go press all your laundry. Twice.

DAMIEN
    I did, didn’t I? Well, no matter. Perhaps I can--

CATHERINE Damien.

DAMIEN
    Yes?

CATHERINE
    I’d like to ask you about something.

DAMIEN
    Yes?

CATHERINE
    What...I mean...can you tell me about...Josephine?

    A stunned paused. Damien looks up from his telescope.

CATHERINE
    I’ve heard the rumors, sure, but there are so many that’s it’s impossible to choose one to... I’m sorry. I shouldn’t have brought it up.

DAMIEN
    I...have difficulty talking about it.

    Catherine nods, dropping it in understanding. Damien regains his composure.

DAMIEN
    But I’m glad you mentioned her.

(CONTINUED)
CATHERINE
    You are?

DAMIEN
    Yes. It means that we’ve both been having similar thoughts.

CATHERINE
    What do you mean?

DAMIEN
    I must admit I’ve been meaning to ask for some time, but I thought it best to be patient about this sort of thing.

CATHERINE
    Patient about what?

DAMIEN
    Catherine, I have never known anyone like you, much less a woman like you. You are intelligent, clever, witty, and beautiful. I know we haven’t known each other for very long, but I have a hard time envisioning the rest of my life without you by my side as you are.

CATHERINE
    I don’t understand...

    Damien gets on one knee.

DAMIEN
    Lady Catherine Moreau, will you do the honor of becoming my wife?

    A long pause. Catherine visibly starts to panic.

CATHERINE
    But...you...you’re king...

DAMIEN
    Yes. Is that a problem?

CATHERINE
    I mean--I’m sorry, I sound ungrateful. I just find it hard to believe that you...mean what you say.

DAMIEN
    I really do.

    (pause)

    Of course, if you’d like to refuse me offer--

(CONTINUED)
CATHERINE
   No. No, I’m not refusing you.

DAMIEN
   You’re not?

CATHERINE No, I--

DAMIEN
   Then you accept?

CATHERINE
   I... Yes, I accept your proposal. I will marry you.

   Damien embraces her.

   Scene 10

   Catherine stands dazed as the scene changes before her more quickly than she realizes. A group of courtiers crowds into the great hall, chattering excitedly. Tristan, Anne, William, and Claude enter with them.

   Song: "CONGRATULATIONS"

CATHERINE
   I’m getting married.

TRISTAN
   YOU’RE GETTING MARRIED

CATHERINE
   I’m getting married.

ANNE
   YOU’RE GETTING MARRIED.

CATHERINE

CLAUDE
Thank you! Thank you! I couldn’t be happier or more proud, or more humble, than I am today, that His Majesty the King would recognize the modest greatness of my young daughter. Thank you.

The crowd cheers and begins to mingle amongst themselves. Catherine tries to leave.

CLAUDE
Catherine, dear, a word?

Catherine resignedly returns to him.

CATHERINE
Yes, father.

CLAUDE
I just wanted to tell you, privately, how proud I am of you.

CATHERINE
(beat, confused)

Proud?

CLAUDE
For years, I’ve worried that you wouldn’t quite find someone who... well I guess it was just a matter of finding the right man, wasn’t it? And who would’ve thought that it would’ve been the king!

CATHERINE
I think...we were all surprised.

CLAUDE
Well, as much as I’ve always been concerned about your...well, courtly manner, I think you will make a wonderful queen and a beautiful wife.

CATHERINE
Thank you, Father. I hope I don’t disappoint you.

CLAUDE
My Catherine, I don’t believe there’s anything you could do at this point that would disappoint me. I am, truly, so proud of you.

A long moment, then Claude exits. Catherine still looks uneasy.

Enter Anne, looking nervous.

ANNE Catherine.

CATHERINE
Anne.

ANNE
Listen, I...I just want to wish you the best. Really. I hope you’re happy.

CATHERINE
Thank you.

ANNE
(beat)
Are you happy?

CATHERINE
Of course. I must be. Right?

Before Anne can ask, William approaches with three ADVISERS.

WILLIAM
Catherine, I’d like you to meet the king’s royal advisers. They will help you immensely when you begin living in the palace.

The Advisers bow.

ADVISER 1
A pleasure to meet you, Lady Catherine.

Catherine curtsies hastily.

CATHERINE
A pleasure.

Catherine joins their circle uncomfortably. They start an inaudible conversation, of which Catherine is not a part, while William pulls Anne aside.

WILLIAM
Anne, a moment. I’d like to apologize for the other night. It was...improper of me.

(CONTINUED)
ANNE Oh.

WILLIAM
But I stand by what I said.

ANNE
I can’t do anything now. I can’t do that to my friend.
I’ll never see justice, now.

WILLIAM
But perhaps you’ll find peace.

He puts a comforting hand on her shoulder and exits.

By now, the Advisers have moved on from Catherine, and the other party-goers have drifted back, leaving Anne and Catherine downstage.

ACT II

Scene 1

The palace main hall. Frenetic music follows a MESSENGER onstage.

MESSENGER
Over the past month, the kingdom has seen unrest throughout peasant towns. Caves in the northern mines have collapsed and resulted in more deaths, and peasants from all corners of the kingdom are rioting against the crown.

DAMIEN (O.S.)
I won’t hear any more of it!

The Messenger hurries offstage as Damien enters, trailed by his three Advisers.

ADVISER 1
Your Majesty, there are riots all along the western and southern towns.

ADVISER 2
A large group of peasants stormed one of the prisons and freed all the debtors.

DAMIEN
Send troops where needed. Break up any riots you find. Keep the peasants off the streets.

ADVISER 3
Sir, that might not be the best course of action--

Damien stops and whirs on him. The three advisers cower.

DAMIEN (dangerous)
I am king. Whatever I decide is what will be.
(pause)
See to it.

The advisers scurry away. Enter Catherine.

CATHERINE Damien.

DAMIEN
This is absurd. I shouldn’t need to deal with this.

CONTINUED:

CATHERINE
I heard about the riots.

DAMIEN
My authority should never be challenged.

CATHERINE
It’ll be all right.

DAMIEN
The people no longer fear me. They no longer respect me.

CATHERINE
But--why, though? Something must have happened.

DAMIEN
Should it matter? I rule them by divine right. They have no right to question me!

(beat)
Catherine, I’m afraid I need to leave.

CATHERINE
You--leave?

DAMIEN
Yes, I need to lead our troops around the southern and western towns.

CATHERINE
Troops? For war?

DAMIEN
No, not war, exactly. I’m just making sure that peace is maintained in those parts.

CATHERINE
What--what are you going to do to those people?

DAMIEN
I’m going to teach them that a king should not be trifled with. They are truly a mass of fools if they think I’ll stand for this.

CATHERINE
Don’t you think there’s a more peaceful way to...

Damien looks to her, and she senses danger.

CATHERINE
Um, I mean, is there a way...you could stay?

Damien relaxes, the picture of understanding, and embraces her.

(CONTINUED)
DAMIEN
You have no reason to worry about me. I’ll be with the strongest guards in the kingdom.
(pause)
In the meantime...

_Damien draws away and pulls out a ring of keys._
_She takes it._

DAMIEN
I’ll give these to you for safe-keeping.

CATHERINE These...

DAMIEN
Open every room in the palace. I know you’ve been trying hard to learn about your position, and I think the best way is to give you full reign, let you make a few mistakes. My advisers will remain here with you, so they will help with any political matters.
(misinterpreting her silence)
I’ll only be gone for a few weeks or so.

_Catherine stares at the keys, realizing the weight of this assignment._

CATHERINE
Are you sure?

DAMIEN
Quite. I leave later today.

CATHERINE
Do you think you could have my brother transferred back here? Just until you get back.

DAMIEN
I think I could do that.

_He kisses her forehead._

DAMIEN
I know you’ll be wonderful, my queen.

_He exits._

Enter Anne.

ANNE Cat--uh, Your Majesty.
CATHERINE
You don’t need to call me that.

ANNE
(beat)
I have some new dresses for you...Is everything all right?

CATHERINE
Oh. Well, no. I mean yes. I mean, it’s nothing you need to worry about.

ANNE
I don’t mind worrying about things.
(beat)
Have you heard from your brother?

CATHERINE
No. He’s still stationed in the west. I haven’t received any letters. But I also haven’t heard reports on him, so that’s a good thing, right? No news is good news.

ANNE Sure.

An awkward silence settles between them.

CATHERINE
I just don’t understand. Why are the people so unhappy? Why do they hate Damien so much?

ANNE
(cautious)
Have you ever been to the outer towns?

CATHERINE
No. Why? Have you?

ANNE
I grew up there. It’s...very different than here.

CATHERINE
I mean, I know it’s farmland and such, but I don’t see how they would grow to be angry with the king.

ANNE
Maybe it’s the taxes.

CATHERINE
The taxes?

(CONTINUED)
ANNE
Or working in those mines for no reason.

CATHERINE
What do you--?

ANNE
(gathering anger)
Maybe they’re tired of working hard and then having their money taken from them.

CATHERINE
What do you mean--?

ANNE
Maybe they’re tired of being voiceless, being treated like cattle!

CATHERINE
All right, enough! I don’t know what’s gotten into you. I thought I was doing you a favor--

ANNE
You’ll be doing me a favor when you start helping people

CATHERINE
(beat)
I--I’m trying.

ANNE
Trying to do what? Fix your hair? Organize balls? You have the chance to do something!

CATHERINE
I don’t know what to do!

ANNE
Well, I do, because I’ve seen it with my own eyes.

Song: "IT’S MERRY WHEN YOU MARRY (YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO) [REPRISE]"

ANNE
You don’t know anything! You have no idea!
(sings)
YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO WORK

CATHERINE
I--what?

ANNE
YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO WORRY FOR YOUR NEXT MEAL
YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO SAY TODAY IS THE DAY YOU MIGHT GET PAID AND ROAM THE MARKETPLACE FOR A DECENT DEAL

CATHERINE
Anne, what is this?

ANNE
YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO STARVE
YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO PUSH, AND TOIL, AND PLOW
YOU’VE NEVER HAD TO SIT AND EAT IN THE MIDDLE OF THE STREET AND BLINDLY WONDER HOW--

CATHERINE Enough!

ANNE
(long pause)
You are not even remotely aware of the power you have,
of the position you’re in to make a difference for these people.

CATHERINE
I don’t! I don’t have power! I don’t do anything.
I’m...useless.

ANNE
That’s your choice.

Anne exits.

Scene 2

A rebel meeting. The rebels mill about and huddle in groups, talking animatedly amongst themselves.

Upon Anne’s entrance, the crowd grows silent and stares at her warily.

ANNE
Hello everyone, sorry I’m late. I had to wait until the queen fell asleep.
(noticing)
What’s wrong?

REBEL 4
It’s been a while since you’ve joined us for a meeting.
ANNE
   I know. I come when I can.

REBEL 3
   How’s life at the castle?

REBEL 4
   Quite cozy, I bet.

REBEL 5
   Murdered any kings, recently?

ANNE
   (beat)
   Is there something you’d like to discuss with me?

REBEL 6
   I understand you’re the queen’s lead maidservant now.

ANNE
   I am, as I told you.

REBEL 4
   You didn’t tell us anything.

REBEL 3
   You’ve had this position for weeks and you haven’t done anything!

REBEL 4
   We have the perfect chance to strike!

ANNE
   And as I’ve mentioned before, I’m the queen’s maidservant. I hardly ever see Damien throughout the day.

REBEL 5
   Damien.

REBEL 6
   Sounds like you two are good friends, doesn’t it?

REBEL 1
   Enough. Anne, we need to talk.
   (to the Rebels) Privately.

   Unwillingly, the rebels disperse.

ANNE
   Well, thanks for jumping in so soon.

REBEL 1
Anne--

ANNE
I was worried they would get the wrong impression.

REBEL 1
They’re frustrated.

ANNE
We’re all frustrated.

REBEL 1
The whole kingdom’s frustrated! This means that others are rising up! We have numbers that we never thought we’d have!

ANNE
But now the king is on to us. He set out for the western towns yesterday.

REBEL 1
(thinking)
Did he? Well, we’ll have to make the most of it.

ANNE How?

_Rebel 1 looks at her, suspicious._

REBEL 1
How? That’s not something our ferocious leader asks.

ANNE
Ferocious leader?

REBEL 1
Our leader gets it done without questions. Our leader doesn’t stop until it’s done.

ANNE
Perhaps that’s been my problem all along.

REBEL 1
Are you trying to back out?

ANNE
Suppose we succeed? Suppose we kill the king. What then? Do we elect one of our number to be king?

REBEL 1
Killing the king is a means to get attention to our cause. It’s justice.

(CONTINUED)
ANNE
It’s revenge.

REBEL 1
What’s the difference?

Anne says nothing. She has no answer.

REBEL 1
For now, there’s not much we can do anyway, not until he returns. We might consider taking out the queen while he’s away--

Anne grabs Rebel 1.

ANNE
Listen to me. You can target the king all you want, I don’t care, but you cannot—you will not—target the queen.

Rebel 1 eases out of her grip.

REBEL 1
So it’s true. That’s how you got such a high position in the palace. You’re a friend of the queen’s.

ANNE
It doesn’t matter.

REBEL 1
It matters plenty. You’re objectivity’s been compromised, Anne.

ANNE
If you were to end Damien, then Catherine would be a great replacement.

REBEL 1
Would she?

ANNE
She cares. She listens. We’d be better off with her as our leader.

REBEL 1
And then be right back where we started a few decades later. You have said yourself that the problem isn’t just this monarch; it’s monarchy in itself.

ANNE
And if we wipe out the entire monarchy, what then? What do we put in its place?
REBEL 1
You’re looking or excuses.

ANNE
I’m pointing out facts.

REBEL 1
You still in or not?

ANNE
(beat)
Y--yes. Yes, I am.

REBEL 1
Good, we need you. We have a plan.

Scene 3

A meeting. The three advisers sit at a table on stage. Soon after, Catherine enters without being noticed.

ADVISERS 1
While the king leads the troops to the west, we need to send reinforcements to the north and east.

ADVISER 3
There aren’t any reports of violence there.

ADVISER 2
I heard of a minor tussle with a couple of guards happened in a northeastern town. We should--

CATHERINE
Pardon me, gentlemen.

The men turn and hurry to their feet as she approaches.

ADVISERS
Your Majesty.

CATHERINE
(gathering courage)
Would you mind terribly if I joined your meeting?

(beat)
I don’t mean to be an intrusion, but I’m learning the ways of royalty, and I thought your meeting might be educational for me.

ADVISER 1
Pardon me, Your Majesty...and I truly mean no disrespect in this, but...I’m not sure the king meant

CATHARINE
I see.

ADVISER 1
Please pardon us, Your Majesty. We are quite busy.

Catherine turns to leave, and the Advisers take their seats.

ADVISER 1
Now, we still have troops in reserve here. I think if we--

Catherine pauses.

CATHARINE
This is the palace.

ADVISER 1
I--beg your pardon, Your Majesty?

Catherine turns back to them. They uncertainly get to their feet again.

CATHARINE
We are in the palace, correct?

ADVISER 1
Ah, yes, Your Majesty.

CATHARINE
And this meeting is being held within the palace, is it not?

ADVISER 1
It is, Your Majesty.

CATHARINE
Then it’s fair to say that this meeting is under my governing, wouldn’t you say?

Adviser 1 looks to the other two for help.

ADVISER 1
I--well, I don’t mean--that is--

ADVISER 3
I would say that’s a fair deduction, Your Majesty.

Advisers 1 and 2 look at him in horror.

CATHARINE
(gaining confidence)
Great! Then it’s settled.

Catherine pulls up a chair between Advisers 1 and 2, wedging in uncomfortably close.

CATHARINE
Please, continue. Pretend I’m not even here.

(pause)
As you wish, Your Majesty.
(to Adviser 2)
So, as you were saying, there are disturbances in the northeast.

ADVISER 3
One disturbance.

ADVISER 2
Yes, a conflict with the peasants and a few of our guards. Perhaps we should send a small platoon to that area, just to prevent any more violence.

ADVISER 3 But--

CATHARINE
How will the townspeople feel about this? Do you think?

The conversation halts abruptly.

CATHARINE What?

ADVISER 1
Your Majesty, the fact that we need to consider sending troops suggests that the townspeople are being unruly.

ADVISER 2
We want to prevent further violence.

CATHERINE
I understand, but why is there violence in the first place? What happened that made the townspeople upset?

Adviser 2 flips through the report.

ADVISER 2
It had to do with a fruit stand, Your Majesty.

CATHERINE
(beat)
A fruit stand?

ADVISER 2
Yes, it seemed that one of the guards purchased a piece of fruit from a farmer, and the farmer became angry and assaulted him.

CATHERINE
That’s it?

ADVISER 2
In summary, Your Majesty, yes.

CATHERINE
May I see that report?

Adviser 2 slides her the report. Catherine starts reading as the conversation continues.

ADVISER 1
Fine, so we’re agreed on sending a platoon to the northeast.

ADVISER 3
Perhaps a platoon--

ADVISER 2
Is not enough, I agree. If we don’t send enough troops, we’ll display over-confidence, and we might further incite the townsfolk into more violence.

ADVISER 1
An excellent point. Perhaps if we send--

CATHERINE
(absently)
He took it.

The men stop their conversation again. Adviser 1 restrains his frustration.

ADVISER 1
Something troubling you, milady?

CATHERINE
Oh, I don’t mean to interrupt, but this report says that the guard took a piece of fruit from the farmer.

ADVISER 1
Yes? And?

CATHERINE
It doesn’t say he purchased it. The guard was stealing.

ADVISER 1
Your Majesty, the report doesn’t indicate that he stole the fruit.

CATHERINE
Of course it doesn’t, who wrote the report?

ADVISER 2
The--Captain of the Guard, Your Majesty.

CATHERINE
The riots in the west and south are one thing, but this incident doesn’t deserve military action.

ADVISER 1
This could be one of many more incidents to come.

CATHERINE
Then we’ll deal with them when the time comes. For now, I say give the farmer compensation for his losses and speak to the Captain of the Guard about disciplining his soldiers.

ADVISER 1
Your Majesty, I must advise against--

CATHERINE
And while we’re all here, I’d like to ask you three about the mining project going on in the northern mountains.

ADVISER 1
For the past few years, the crown has been funding the project--

CATHERINE Why?

The king requested it.

But what are the miners looking for?

Precious gems, of course.

Have they found any?

Ye-yes. There are reports here of some findings.

But not enough to justify the expense.

No, Your Majesty.

Then I would like to stop the project.

Stop it?

It’s a waste of money, and more importantly too many people have lost their lives. There’s no reason--

Your Majesty, I must protest. This is simply not how things are done.

I am queen. While my husband is away, I will do what I think it best. I think I’m allowed a few mistakes for my first time being queen. Good day, gentlemen.

The men bow and leave. As soon as they’re out of sight, Catherine lets out a pent-up breath, showing her nervousness fully. She gives herself a moment.

Catherine (cont’d)
STARS BURNED BRIGHTER THAT FATEFUL NIGHT
BUT I NEVER CONSIDERED IF IT WAS RIGHT

HAVE I DONE NOTHING GOOD
I HOPED THAT TIME WOULD TELL
IF THESE FEELINGS OF MINE SOUNDED LIKE WEDDING BELLS
IF THE WORLD GREW
WHILE I STAYED SMALL BUT IS THERE MORE TO THINK OF IS THERE MORE TO ALL

THIS IS MY CHANCE TO A PART
AMONG THE BLACK I’LL BE A SHINING STAR
NO MORE WAITING, NO MORE CHANCES
NO MORE GETTING LOST IN DANCES
THIS IS MY TIME TO SEE WHAT KIND OF QUEEN I’LL BE

I’M NOT A NUISANCE, NOT JUST A WIFE
NOT JUST SITTING WATCHING STRIFE
IT’S TIME TO BE LOUD AND BE FREE
YES IT’S A QUEEN I’LL BE

She exits.

Scene 4

Catherine sits in Damien’s study, reading a book.

Catherine (reading)
"Upon the First King’s coronation, stars fell from the sky like rain, and from the stars, the lands grew bountifully. It is said that the stars remain, buried throughout the kingdom."

Enter Tristan.

Tristan
Um...Your Majesty?

He bows as Catherine looks up.

Catherine
Oh, you’re not dead. And don’t call me that, please.

She comes over and hugs him. Tristan, surprised, returns the embrace.

(Continued)
TRISTAN
Are you all right? The king himself reassigned me to be your personal guard.

Catherine pulls out of the hug.

CATHERINE
I...need your help. I want you to tell me something.

TRISTAN (unsure)
All right.

CATHERINE
And you must swear to be honest with me.

TRISTAN
I swear.

CATHERINE
I mean it, Tristan, you can’t lie to me about this, even if you think it scares me.

TRISTAN
All right! What it is?

CATHERINE
What’s it like in the western towns?

TRISTAN
(long pause)
Well, the farmers are rioting, but the violence isn’t--

CATHERINE
The truth, Tristan. You swore to me.

TRISTAN
(pause)
You shouldn’t need to worry over these things.

CATHERINE
Shouldn’t I? I’m the queen!

TRISTAN
Yes, but you have a king.

CATHERINE
And if that king is cruel? And violent? And more likely to demolish a town than reason with his people for a peaceful solution?
(pause)
I need to know.
TRISTAN
The riots are worse than the reports indicated. Much worse. Many people are protesting the higher taxes and the strict military discipline. We contain them, but the sheer numbers... It’s like the kingdom is having a war amongst itself.

CATHERINE
That’s exactly what it seems. Damien is going just to prove a point.

TRISTAN
Catherine, please don’t do anything rash. You won’t be able to get away with things like that.

CATHERINE
Au contraire. I get away with way more now.

Catherine returns to her book. Tristan notices the telescope and walks over to it.

TRISTAN
Is this yours?

Catherine looks up.

CATHERINE
Oh. No, it’s Damien’s.

TRISTAN
I bet you use it all the time.

CATHERINE
(beat)
No, I don’t. I haven’t used it once since...since the night he proposed.

TRISTAN
Does he treat you well? He doesn’t...harm you or anything?

CATHERINE
No, no, he takes good care of me. I just wonder if he is a better husband than king.

Catherine flips through the book.

CATHERINE
What I don’t understand is the mines. There’s nothing there! Why spend so much money on a useless project?
TRISTAN
You think the king is looking for something?

CATHERINE
I suppose.

TRISTAN
You could ask him when he returns.

CATHERINE
I’m not sure I can.

TRISTAN
Well, I just ask that you be careful. I will be your personal guardsman.

CATHERINE
You don’t have to, I just asked that you be sent back.

TRISTAN
Orders from the king himself.

CATHERINE
Well, you know best.

TRISTAN
I’d like to talk to your current guardsmen. I’ll be just outside the door.

CATHERINE
All right. And Tristan.

He stops.

CATHERINE
I’m glad you’re here.

Tristan smiles and exits. Catherine returns to her book, but she quickly realizes that she can’t focus.

She turns to the door of the secret chamber. She stares, considering.

Enter William. He bows.

WILLIAM
Your Majesty.

Catherine stands to greet him.

(CONTINUED)
Catherine
    Professor! Thank you for coming, please don’t bow.

William
    I’m afraid you’ll have to get used to that, Your Majesty.

They sit.

Catherine
    Please sit. I wanted to discuss something with you. I heard that you were once the royal librarian.

William
    Uh--yes, I was. For a short time.

    Catherine hefts up the book she was reading.

Catherine
    I was wondering if you could tell me...about Josephine.

William
    Ah--Josephine.

Catherine
    Yes. What was she like?

William (hesitant)
    Well, she was...kind. Good company. New to throne, as you are, so she felt uncertain about her place here. She visited me in the library often.

Catherine
    Did she and Damien...love each other?

William Well...

Catherine
    You can tell me the truth, Professor. Either way.

William
    The truth is I don’t really know. They seemed to get along well enough in my presence, but there’s never truly a way to be sure of these things, I suppose.

Catherine
    (pause)
    What do you think happened to her?

WILLIAM
My dear, I’ve been asked that question more times than I can count. I don’t know. I never imagined her to be the type of person that would run away, even when things became difficult between her and her husband, but if she didn’t run away, what happened to her?

Catherine nods, considering his words, and a short silence settles between them.

WILLIAM
Is there anything else you wished to discuss?

CATHERINE
Just...how’s Mars?

WILLIAM
Retrograding quite nicely, Your Majesty. Good day.

William bows and exits. Catherine sits for a moment in silence.

She turns and looks at the chamber door. Music swells as she comes to a decision.

She begins looking for her keys and soon realizes she can’t find them. The music fades.

CATHERINE
Oh no, oh no, oh no--Tristan!

Tristan enters.

TRISTAN
What’s wrong?

CATHERINE
I can’t find the keys.

TRISTAN
(relieved)
Oh. Well, where did you have them last?

CATHERINE
They were here this morning, right here! I don’t know where I could’ve put it. Maybe Anne moved them? I don’t know...

TRISTAN
Anne was here?
CATHERINE
Yes, she’s in and out all day. She might’ve been cleaning and moved them. You know I could never keep up a place on my own--

TRISTAN
All right, I’ll go ask around, you keep looking here.

CATHERINE
All right.

Tristan exits.

Scene 5

Tristan enters, finding Anne folding laundry.

TRISTAN
Hello.

Anne jumps, startled.

TRISTAN
Sorry. I keep doing that.

ANNE
It’s fine. It’s...good to see you.

TRISTAN
And you.

(beat)
I’m looking for Catherine’s ring of keys. Have you seen them?

Anne pauses only briefly.

ANNE
I had them this morning, but I left them in the room.

TRISTAN
That’s what I thought. Catherine will find them eventually.

A charged pause. Tristan considers leaving, but doubles back. Anne looks up from her folding and eyes him.

ANNE
Is there something on your mind?

TRISTAN
(pause)

(MORE)
TRISTAN (cont’d)
I saw the outer towns, the farmlands, for the first time. I saw the men who...keep the peace there. There is...a lot that could be better.

ANNE
I’m glad you agree.

TRISTAN
I’m sorry if I seemed insensitive before.

ANNE
Tristan, you are perhaps the most caring guard in this palace.

TRISTAN
(smirking)
That’s not much of a compliment, I suppose.

ANNE Well, it is.

I KNOW WHAT THIS MOMENT MEANS BUT TOMORROW IS UNCERTAIN AND I ONLY CAN HOPE THAT

ANNE
I’VE NEVER QUITE HAD THIS FEELING
I NEVER EXPECTED IT FOR ME
BUT WHEN I MET YOU
YOU WON’T BELIEVE, BUT IT’S TRUE
THIS WAS THE LAST THING I COULD FORESEE AND IT SCARES ME TO NO END THAT THIS ISN’T PRETEND

    Scene 6

    Back in the king’s study, Catherine is further along in the book she’s been reading.

    A commotion begins just outside her chambers. She looks up as two GUARDS lead in a restrained Anne.
    Catherine shoots to her feet.

    CATHERNIE
        What are you doing?

    GUARD 1
        Your Majesty, this maidservant was caught stealing from the royal treasury.

    CATHERNIE Stealing?

        Guard 2 holds up a large pouch of gold and the ring of keys.

    GUARD 2
        She was in position of these when

        Catherine takes the items.

    GUARD 1
        She insists that she was there on your orders.

        Catherine and Anne stare at each other, Catherine understanding. After some silence, Catherine comes to a decision.

    CATHERNIE
        She was.

    GUARD 1
        Your Majesty?

    CATHERNIE
        I gave her these keys to retrieve some gold from the treasury.

    GUARD 1
        But, she attempted to evade us.

    (CONTINUED)
CATHERINE

Obviously, I asked her to be discreet. For my own reasons. Release her.

The guards do.

GUARD 1

Apologies, Your Majesty.

CATHERINE

I can only hope that the rest of my guard is as diligent as you, gentlemen. You’re dismissed.

The Guards bow and exit. As soon as they’re gone. Catherine huffs in indignation.

ANNE

Catherine.

CATHERINE

Are you part of it? The rebellion? Are you

ANNE

(long pause)

Yes.

CATHERINE

How long?

ANNE

Since before we met.

CATHERINE

Is that why we’re friends?

ANNE

What? No--

CATHERINE

Is that why you were happy to take this position when I offered it?

ANNE

No.

CATHERINE

Are you going to kill me in my sleep?

ANNE

No!

(CONTINUED)
CATHERINE
Or Damien?

ANNE
(beat)
No. No, I’m not...that’s not what I want.

CATHERINE
Then what do you want? To steal? Are you just a petty thief?

ANNE
You call that stealing? Have you even been to the treasury? That bag is a trinket compared to everything you have. Vaults and vaults full of gold! More than you could ever spend in a lifetime.

CATHERINE
(pause)
Because of the taxes.

ANNE
And what do you spend it on? A mining project in the north that’s far more dangerous than it is profitable.

CATHERINE
(beat)
You always make me feel like a cruel idiot, Anne. Like I stole the money myself, pick-pocketed every farmer within our borders for everything they had.

ANNE
No, you just married the man who did. You fell in love with him.

CATHERINE
Don’t say it like that.

ANNE
How would you like me to say it? That you were tricked? That you didn’t really know the man you were marrying? That you weren’t at any point just blinded by all the power you were about to receive?

CATHERINE
I’m tired of trying to justify myself to you. I want to help I want to make things better. Why not instead of blaming me for everything that’s happened, you help me figure out how?

ANNE
I’m not the queen.

(CONTINUED)
CATHERINE
And what would you do if you were queen? What changes would you make? Or is everything you’re doing just about revenge? Would you rather just hurt me back?

A heavy silence. Anne is so angry she’s trembling, but she has nothing to say. She curtsies lowly.

ANNE
If that will be all, Your Majesty.

CATHERINE Here.

Anne turns. Catherine tosses her the bag of gold.

CATHERINE
Since you worked so hard for it.

Anne catches it, staring at it as though she’d like to throw it back at her. She leaves without a backwards glance.

Alone again, Catherine lets the exhaustion show plainly on her face.

Song: "A QUEEN I’LL BE (REPRISE 1)"

CATHERINE
WHAT DID I DO WRONG
OR WAS THIS DOOMED FROM THE START WAS I WRONG WHEN I LISTENED TO MY HEART

She pulls out the ring of keys and picks the one that goes to the chamber.

CATHERINE IS IT TIME TO FACE THIS OR IS IT TIME TO RUN
THEY SAY BE CAREFUL WHAT YOU WISH FOR BUT HAS WISHING EVER DONE

She slowly approaches the door, the music around her growing more tense and dangerous the closer she gets.

Slowly, trembling a bit, Catherine puts the key in the lock and opens the door.

The music stops.
The stage morphs into the chamber: a dimly lit room of stone with a single, long table, a body hidden under a curtain with a book beside it. Catherine stares, confused and apprehensive.

Slowly, she approaches the table. She goes to the book first, opens it and thumbs through it, but it means nothing to her, and the mass under the sheet pulls her attention.

Finally, she lifts a corner.

She screams in horror. A haunting rendition of the "A QUEEN I’LL BE" theme fills the air.

Catherine stumbles out of the chamber. The room transforms back into Damien's room, though the music still lingers. Catherine closes the door behind her. She takes a moment to catch her breath, trembling.

Enter Anne.

ANNE
Catherine, a carriage just pulled up to the front... Damien--what’s wrong? Catherine?

Catherine shakes her head, struggling to speak.

CATHERINE
Tristan. Go find Tristan.

ANNE
Cat, what happened?

CATHERINE
Please--go get him. Hurry!

Anne runs off.

Catherine looks around, fighting down panic. Her eyes eventually find the chamber door and linger there.

Slowly, shakily, Catherine enters the chamber again.

A second time, the chamber is somewhat less terrifying. Catherine looks around and uncertainly takes the book, staring at the body as though afraid it may come to life.
Catherine turns her attention to the book, a large, old volume with a faded cover. She opens it and begins to read.

Enter Josephine, an echo of who she was. She is dressed the same as before. She speaks aloud what Catherine is reading.

JOSEPHINE

Before the world had grown and kingdoms stretched to the sky, a village settled in the valley. Among them was a young man. Son of a farmer, he was the kindest heart in the village. When he could spare a moment from his father’s farm, he brought food to the children, helped the widow with repairs, and assisted the blacksmith. Everyone in the village loved him very much.

One night, when the stars were happiest, they rained down all across the valley. One aimed straight for the village. The villagers thought they were doomed.

While everyone ran into their homes, the brave young man stood in the center of the village and raised his hand. Just as the star was about to hit the ground, he caught it in his palm.

The people celebrated, for their village had been saved. The children danced around him, the widow sewed for him a royal blue cape, and the blacksmith made for him a scepter on which to place the star. From that day, the young man became their king, and a great kingdom was born.

Now the kingdom waits for the king’s return, as the ages whisper the song:

BORN OF GREATEST SACRIFICE
THIS POWER WAITS FOR ONE A RULER CROWNED BY COMET’S LIGHT TO SIT UPON THE THRONE

Josephine exits, and the music fades. Catherine looks up, closes the book, and places it where it was, beginning to understand.

DAMIEN

I trusted you.

Catherine cries in fright and whirls around. Damien steps into the light.

(CONTINUED)
CONTINUED:

CATHARINE Damien.

DAMIEN
I asked you not to come in here.

CATHARINE
Damien...tell me it’s not true.

DAMIEN
I opened my palace to you, gave you everything you asked of me.

CATHARINE
You...Josephine.

DAMIEN
DO NOT SPEAK HER NAME. She was--I loved her more than anyone.

CATHARINE
You... This is what you do to people you love?

DAMIEN
You’ve read the book. You have the book. You know--in order for my kingdom to see its destiny, in order for me to truly assume the throne, a sacrifice had to be made.

CATHARINE
And you...you...

DAMIEN
Do not judge me Catherine. I did what I thought was best for my people.

CATHARINE
And it’s done nothing. You’ve had them in the mines digging for this star that might not even exist.

DAMIEN
It must exist--

CATHARINE
People are dying!

DAMIEN
As people often do.

CATHARINE
(beat)
You need to stop this.

CONTINUED:

DAMIEN
Catherine, you don’t understand.

CATHERINE
You need to close the mines.

DAMIEN
I have a duty as king--

CATHERINE
You need to lower taxes--

DAMIEN
To make the sacrifices--

CATHERINE
And swear to protect--

DAMIEN
That no one else can make!

_Damien rips the keys from Catherine’s hand. She lunges for them, but he grabs her wrist._

DAMIEN
I love you.

CATHERINE No--

DAMIEN
I’ve loved you since the day I met you.

CATHERINE
That’s not love--

DAMIEN
But a king must put his kingdom before himself.

_He unsheathes a dagger. Catherine freezes with fear._

CATHERINE
It...you...

DAMIEN
I love you, Catherine.

CATHERINE
Wouldn’t...do...

_Damien pins her against the wall with nowhere to run._

CONTINUED:

DAMIEN
Perhaps it didn’t work with Josephine because I didn’t feel this way with her. I tried. Heaven knows I tried.

CATHERINE Please...

DAMIEN
And it was the worst moment of my life, doing what I did so many years ago.

CATHERINE Damien...

DAMIEN
But it’s not going to be anything like the pain I’ll feel with this.

Tristan runs on stage and grabs Damien’s hand.

CATHERINE (breathless)
Tristan.

A struggle ensues. Tristan pulls Damien away from Catherine and forces him to drop the dagger. Catherine stares at it, then grabs it, holding it like she would something dead.

Tristan and Damien continue to struggle, but Damien is clearly stronger. Catherine holds the dagger uncertainly, not sure what to do.

DAMIEN
You...filthy...traitor!

Damien shoves Tristan away from him and draws his sword.

CATHERINE
Damien, don’t--

DAMIEN
You are worse than the peasants.

Damien aims his sword.

Catherine reaffirms her grip.

CATHERINE NO!

Catherine leaps and stabs Damien in the back with his own dagger.

The world stands still. Damien tries to look over his shoulder, but he can’t see her.

DAMIEN
I love you.

He collapses. Catherine backs away, horrified at what she has done. For a moment, Tristan is equally horrified, but when she falls to her knees and begins to weep, he kneels beside her. She turns to him, and they embrace.

Scene 7

The scene transforms into a funeral with Catherine, Tristan, and Damien still on stage. A blanket is placed over Damien’s body.

Tristan brings Catherine to her feet as Anne, courtiers, and even rebels gather around them in a loose swarm, giving their condolences before drifting on.

As people speak to Catherine, she hardly reacts.

WILLIAM
I’m so sorry for your loss.

CLAUDE
I can’t believe he grew ill so quickly. He was so young.

COURTIER 1
What a horrid tragedy!

COURTIER 2
I can’t believe it...

ADVISER 1
The troops have been withdrawn from the farm towns, Your Majesty.

ADVISER 2
The mining project has been shut down.

ADVISER 3
The families of those who lost their lives will be compensated.

REBEL 1
So glad it’s over...

One by one, everyone but Catherine, Anne, and Tristan exit the stage.

(CONTINUED)
CATHERINE
If you don’t mind, I’d like a moment alone.

ANNE
Are you sure?

CATHERINE
Yes. Please.

Tristan comes forward and places a gentle kiss on her forehead.

TRISTAN
You know best.

She offers them a weak, painful smile.

Tristan nods, understanding, but Anne remains unsure. He takes Anne’s hand gently, pulling her attention away from Catherine, and leads her offstage.

Catherine is alone. She lets her pain show plainly for the first time: grief and betrayal and anger push a choking sob from her, but her eyes are dry.

Song: "A QUEEN I’LL BE (REPRISE 2)"

CATHERINE
(sings)
THEY SAY WHEN A LOVED ONE IS LOST
A NEW STAR BURNS BRIGHT
BUT DOES THAT TRUTH STILL STAND
IF HE’S KILLED BY MY OWN HAND OR IS DARKNESS BETTER AT NIGHT

Enter Josephine, looking just as she did in the beginning, an echo of what she was.

As she sings, Catherine reacts only slightly, as though the words are merely her own thoughts.

JOSEPHINE IT WAS MY CHANCE TO BE A PART
OF A CHANGING WORLD ABOUT TO START

CATHERINE
NO MORE WAITING, NO MORE FEAR
NOW MY WAY IS STRAIGHT AND CLEAR

JOSEPHINE
   THERE WAS NO CHANCE TO SEE WHAT KIND OF QUEEN I’D BE

CATHERINE & JOSEPHINE
   I’M NOT A MYSTERY, NO LONGER A WIFE
   IT’S TIME TO BE STRONG AND BELIEVE

   Josephine stops singing. The music drops away.

CATHERINE (sing)
   YES, IT’S A QUEEN I’LL BE

   Josephine exits, a final, farewell glance to Catherine.

   Catherine is alone once more. She bows her head, tired from her own emotions.

   Fade out.

   THE END.
